In the REVIEW of November 10 you speak of the quantity of cyanide to use for 2,000 cubic feet of space and of the method of using it. I have two houses, each of 10,000 cubic feet or over. I grow Grand Rapids lettuce and every winter am more or less troubled by green fly. Sometimes we are able to control it by smoking with tobacco stems. This season it is unusually bad and excessive smoking is hard on the lettuce, so I hail with delight a sure and safe destroyer. Will you tell me how you would use the cyanide so as to safely disseminate the fumes through so large a space? Each house is 24x100. W. M. P.

In a house 24x100 feet I would advise the use of three jars and it will be better to have two-gallon jars to prevent boiling over. Have one jar at each end of the house and one in the center. Use one pint of acid and two and one-half ounces of cyanide for each jar. Put the acid with an equal amount of water together in each jar. Then begin at the end farthest from the door to drop in the cyanide. Have this wrapped up in thick papers, two and one-half ounces in each. Drop in paper and all and you will be able to drop in all three and get to the door before the acid has eaten through the paper, which it has to do before the gas begins to be given off. Make sure to lock the door, so that no one can get in. Operate at night and by next morning the house can safely be entered. Be sure that the foliage is dry and the temperature below 60 degrees, which it would of course be in a lettuce house. The quantity given here is not so strong as usually recommended but I have found it quite strong enough to kill green fly. If your house is very close and the night still a smaller quantity might do the work but I have used it stronger than this, when experimenting with no bad results.

W. S. CROYDON.

[We fear that Mr. Croydon has not made sufficiently clear, in the above, the deadly character of the gas. Under no circumstances delay one instant in getting out of the house after having dropped the package of cyanide in the jar of acid.—Ed.]

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—Cucumbers, 50c to $1.15 doz.; leaf lettuce, 30c to 40c case; head lettuce, $3 to $4 bbl.

Boston, Dec. 27.—Cucumbers, $5 to $12 box; lettuce, 25c to 35c doz.; radishes, 25c to 35c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 30c lb.; mushrooms, 75c to 80c lb.; mint, $1.25 doz.; parsley, 25c box; asparagus, $5 doz. bunches.

LETTUCE.

The season so far has been favorable for the growth of lettuce, as we have had very little dull, damp weather, but we are not out of the woods until we get through the month of January. So far this season we have had no trouble whatever with leaf burn or similar diseases. As a preventive against these it is well to keep the soil rather on the dry side now, to keep the plants firm and to keep the soil well stirred and all decayed or yellow leaves picked off as soon as they appear.

If raised benches are employed for growing lettuce it will be necessary to apply water oftener to prevent the beds from becoming dry. I think this frequent application of water necessary for raised benches is one of the chief reasons why lettuce does not succeed as well on benches as in solid beds and I would advise those who go into lettuce growing to any extent to try, if possible, and do away with raised benches altogether and adopt the solid beds. In the solid bed the natural moisture of the soil is a great advantage. The fact that in the solid bed the roots of the plants are cooler than the overhead temperature is also very advantageous.

It is not always possible to arrange the benches just as one would want them. A good many small growers grow lettuce as a sort of catch crop and most depend on the benches for growing other crops at other times. Where the Grand Rapids variety can be sold it is undoubtedly the best variety for bench purposes. But the grower is often confronted with a demand for head lettuce only and it is often no easy matter to produce good head lettuce in raised benches. The plants do just as well up to a certain stage. is after "hearting" begins that leaf burn usually makes its appearance and it is very disappointing to a grower to see his nice lettuce getting brown or rotting around the edges of the leaves just when the crop is nearing the mature stage and when the return for all his labor and trouble was about to be realized.

Of course, this is not always the case but, on the other hand, it cannot always be avoided. The lowering of the temperature of the house often helps to check the spread of the disease but if the crop is far enough advanced to be fit for market, the best and surest plan is to cut and market the crop as soon as possible, as it is a hard matter to entirely stop the spread of the disease where once it has got a good start.

If head lettuce has to be grown on benches get as hardy a variety as possible (we find Deacon the least susceptible to disease), keep the benches well stirred and clean, the atmosphere of the house sweet and use every possible means to keep the growth firm until the dull, short days are over. W. S. CROYDON.

BELLEVILLE, ILL.—Christmas business was never better than this year with all in the trade here. Holly and green were abundant and sold out clean.

PLEASE accept my thanks for the Pronouncing Dictionary which you have added to your already valuable columns and which has enhanced their value one round dollar more.—E. J. THOMAS.

CHAMBERSBURG, PA.—Byer Bros. say Christmas business was much better than last year, with prices about the same. In cut flowers, roses, carnations and violets sold best; very little call for hyacinths or narcissi. Blooming plants, such as azaleas, poinsettias and primroses, were in strong demand, with very light call for foliage plants. Holly had an extra heavy call, with only fair quality available.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

M. S. Good, Hitt, Mo., has bought stock with which to start a nursery business.

Prof. J. L. Budd, for twenty-two years head of the Iowa State Agricultural College, died at San Antonio, Tex., December 20. He was widely known among nurserymen.

B. T. Hoyt, the Minnesota nurseryman, speaks in very high terms of the strawberry-raspberry, commending it particularly to the attention of manufacturers of preserves.

S. W. Marshall & Son, nurserymen, plant and seed dealers, Fresno, Cal., issue a neat descriptive catalogue of sixty-four pages without prices, this important information being supplied annually in a separate pamphlet.

Peony growers report a very good demand for the past season and prospects for big business in 1905, with stock short in many varieties. Foreign growers are advancing their prices, pushing them in some instances higher than the same sorts can be bought for on this side.

Frank Hamilton, superintendent of Bronx park, New York, has resigned to enter the Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, N. Y., as manager of its landscape and nursery sales department, having purchased a substantial interest in the corporation. Both the company and Mr. Hamilton are to be congratulated on the alliance.

WESTERN NURSERYMEN MEET.

The Western Association of Wholesale Nurserymen held its annual convention at Kansas City, December 20 and 21, with a large number of nurserymen from Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and the southwest in attendance. An amendment to the constitution of the association was offered by A. L. Brooke, of Topeka, providing for the dropping of the word "wholesale" from the title of the organization. It would then be known simply as the Western Association of Nurserymen, and would not, as now, be restricted to the large nurseries which do a wholesale business. The amendment will not be voted upon until next year's meeting, but the sentiment of the association seems to be favorable to its adoption.

The annual election resulted in the choice of these officers for the ensuing year: President, Peter Youngers, Geneva, Neb.: vice-president, A. Willis, Ottawa, Kan.; secretary and treasurer, E. J. Holman, Leavenworth, Kan.; executive committee, F. H. Stannard, Ottawa, Kan.; W. P. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; R. J. Bagby, New Haven, Mo.; D. S. Lake, Shenandoah, Ia., and E. P. Barnardin, Parsons, Kan.

The association endorsed the work of the Postal Progress League. W. P. Stark discussed the increased production and narrowing margin of profit in the business. Other talks were by R. J. Bagby, E. S. Welch, J. A. Lopeman, E. M. Sherman and J. W. Schutte. Prof. G. G. Hedgecock, of the Missouri Botanic Garden, delivered an address on diseases of nursery stock.

There was also a meeting of retail nurserymen December 20, presided over by J. W. Hill, of Des Moines.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

Holiday trade here has been very gratifying, both to the grower and retailer, trade being good, prices fair and a really good demand. The various stores in the city were tastefully decorated for the occasion and attracted considerable attention. They showed an assortment of pot plants and cut flowers that would have done credit to a much larger city.

Among the growers there is a feeling of satisfaction that this is one of their best, both in volume of business done and in regard to prices, which, while satisfactory to themselves, were also considered fair by their customers. The supply of roses was smaller than was anticipated, owing to continued dull weather, which also affected the output of carnations to a considerable extent, but the quality of both was excellent and the demand such that many orders had to be refused. Violets also were a short crop and prices ruled high. Of greens, such as smilax, Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri, there was an abundance and a fair demand. Lilies were scarce and in little demand, while callas sold readily at $15 per hundred. Bulbous stock, with the exception of Paper Whites and Romans, was scarce, the price for these being $3 to $4, with a fair demand during the latter part of the week.

In potted plants, such as azaleas, cyclamens, primroses, etc., the demand was much heavier than last year and the retail stores did a big business in this line.

Mr. Durand, who succeeded the late Grove P. Rawson, made an excellent showing, his poinsettias and violets being exceptionally fine.

H. N. Hoffman had a very fine cut of carnations, which he disposed of at good prices. Mr. LaFrance also did a big business in carnations and potted plants. Mr. Leyden, who started in business about two months ago, reports a fine trade and expresses himself as being satisfied with his venture.

From the throngs which crowded Mr. Leavitts' store it was evident that he was doing a rushing business. He is satisfied that his trade is fifty per cent larger than last year.

This being the first year of the United States Cut Flower Co., it was watched by the other growers and the stockholders with a good deal of interest. Their cut of both roses and carnations and the side issues was fair and the quality fine. The demand for their stock far exceeded their anticipation, having to refuse many good orders. Mr. Curran, the superintendent, is entirely satisfied with his first Christmas and prospects. R.

RED BANK, N. J.

The greatest time the Monmouth County Horticultural Society ever had was at its first annual dinner, held at the Sheridan Hotel, Red Bank, December 22. Much of the pleasure is to be attributed to the toast-master, Patrick O'Mara. He kept the company in a constant uproar of laughter and the remarks of the visitors were gratifying to the members as well as to the toast-master. The different speakers were the officers of the society and Dr. W. S. Whitmore, John Yeomans, N. Butterbach, the proprietor of the Red Bank Register, John Cook, and a great many others. Charles H. Totty responded for the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Club and John Scott for the Tarrytown Horticultural Society. B.

The Market.

Christmas over, we find all comparing notes and all report being well satisfied. Most of the stores say it was the best Christmas for several years. This was especially true in the plant line, which is increasing with each succeeding year. Some say they sold more plants for Christmas than they did at Easter. The "green goods" men are not quite so well satisfied; many loads of trees were hauled to the river and toward the last of the week the commission men sold the grocers and fakirs trees as cheap as $1 a dozen and holly 65 cents per case. This of course affected the florists; in fact, the stores now handle only what holly they need for fine wreaths and special orders for selected stock, for which they can get a good price.

Wholesale prices ran about as follows, fancy stock being scarce: American Beauties, $15 to $100; Maids and Brides, $6 to $25; Liberties, $10 to $40; carnations, $3 to $12; violets, $2 to $3; no advance on other stock.

Roman hyacinths were a glut, but as that was about the only thing there cannot be much complaint.

The street boys found someone loaded with carnations, as Saturday night they were offering them at two for a nickle, very fair stock, and Bill O'Brien, the only Irish flower fakir we have, had violets to sell at purchaser's own price. There were still too many white and not enough red carnations for Christmas.

Various Notes.

Florists' Club meets Tuesday, January 3, for nomination of officers and to discuss the plants handled for the holidays.

There was considerable trouble with the express companies, as goods were not coming in as they should, especially stock out of New York.

Randolph & McClements report trade as the best. They kept their six wagons and big van busy delivering.

A. W. Smith says there was nothing like it; cleaned up nicely without much of the usual labor and worry.

Mrs. E. A. Williams is satisfied; it was good enough for her, but she is still too busy to talk.

R. Faulk & Son say they got all that was coming to them.

The wholesalers seem to be well satisfied. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., which is the oldest, say it was the best in their experience, that although they sold some stock cheap they cleaned up well and will average up all right. J. B. Murdoch, our new wholesale house, handled quantities of carnations and violets. Ed McCallum, of the Florists' Exchange, reported good business.

And we all got rain, and we needed it.

Hoo-Hoo.

NYACK, N. Y.—R. C. Pye has secured control of E. Dolby's bright pink carnation, Senator Crane, and will put it on the market this season.

PEORIA, ILL.—J. C. Murray has been confined to his home for the past fifteen months but is much improved and hopes to be strong enough soon to resume business.

GRUNDY CENTER, IA.—Theodore Souers is shipping his carnations to the Chicago wholesale market, realizing more money there than he can get for them at home.

"DAMPING-OFF."

Although the nature of plant diseases and the methods of combatting them have been frequently brought before gardeners, it is to be feared that comparatively few individuals have practically applied this knowledge. This indifference is no doubt to a large extent due to their seldom experiencing a serious epidemic. Another reason for it is that the books dealing with plant diseases are not well known, while most are written in scientific language, that is not easily understood by the laity. There are few gardeners whose plants have not at some time or other suffered from fungus diseases, but as long as the consequences have not been serious they have escaped attention, or been ascribed to accidental causes.

One of the most frequent diseases occurs in seedling plants of almost any kind. The young plants, when still in the seed-bed, blacken, decay and die off in patches. The disease spreads rapidly from bed to bed, but is often confined to one frame or to one house. This is caused by a parasitic fungus named Pythium Debaryanum, Hesse, the minute spores of which are carried about in the air, and are caught by the damp surface of the seedling stem. There they germinate, pushing a fine tube through the soft and tender skin of the stem. This tube quickly branches, forming a mass of fine threads called "mycelium," or spawn, which penetrate the cells of the seedling, absorbing nutriment and causing death of the young plant. Numerous spores are then produced which quickly spread the disease. This is usually, though somewhat incorrectly, called "damping-off" (it might be more correctly called "black stem") of seedlings, and it is ascribed to an excess of water. Where the beds are kept for a time in a dry condition, the disease often wholly disappears, because the spores require moisture external to the seedlings to enable them to germinate. This disease is consequently favored by too thick sowing, which prevents light and air from freely reaching the soil. The disease is therefore rarely met with in a bed with "pricked-off" seedlings. — Gardeners' Chronicle.

PACIFIC COAST.

Seattle, Wash.—The Brighton Seed and Floral Co. will open a store January 3 at 215 Occidental avenue. They will handle all kinds of seeds, plants, nursery stock, cut flowers and florists' supplies, doing both wholesale and retail business.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are still a few days in advance of Christmas and business up to date is fair. Tomorrow and Saturday will tell the tale as to whether this year is to be up to or above the average. The principal demand has been for green stuff and other material used in store and home decorations and the dealers who make a specialty of this class of stock have had little complaint. Red berries have been sold by the ton and huckleberry by the dray-load and the demand continues unabated.

We have had several slight frosts this week but not sufficient to curtail the flower supply. The price of carnations has been advanced somewhat, probably about twenty-five per cent this month, and roses in the same proportion. The best Beauties are selling wholesale today at $2.50 to $3 per dozen. Brides, Maids and Testouts bring from 50 cents to $1 per dozen. Valley is plentiful at $5 per hundred. Narcissi are a glut. A few daffodils have made their appearance. Poinsettias from Los Angeles are in evidence everywhere and make a good show.

Various Notes.

The Cox Seed Co. has handled a good many barrels of British Columbian holly this season. Each contains twenty-five pounds and it sells for $16.50 per barrel.

The Whittlesey Floral Gardens, of Los Angeles, have shipped a great many thousand outdoor poinsettias to the stores here during this week. The flowers arrive in splendid condition and cost the retailers about $10 per hundred.

A fatal shooting took place December 17 at the greenhouses of P. C. Meyer, at Burlingame. John Breen, employed as a gardener and brother of J. T. Breen, the foreman, shot John Olsen, also an employee, Breen claims to have shot Olsen by accident. There is a party named Mitchell with whom he had trouble earlier in the day and who threatened to return and "do him up" at night. Hearing a commotion outside of his house he discharged a revolver in the air, hitting Olsen.

THE JAPANESE INVASION.

It is surprising how the Japanese are gradually gaining a foothold in the florist and nursery business in California. This fact is being viewed with considerable alarm by the growers, as it is evident that the Japs are in the trade to stay. The writer well remembers the first Japanese to engage in this line of trade, only a few years ago. He started in with a few chrysanthemum cuttings brought from Japan and in a few seasons had worked up a profitable business; in fact, he was the first to make the mum popular as a garden flower in this locality. In a few years he branched out into other lines of Japanese stock and then into carnation growing. His success was noted by some of his countrymen and now Japanese gardens and greenhouses are to be seen all over the neighboring country. One of the largest concerns California is owned by a company of Japanese and their equipment is second to none. They employ from fifty to seventy-five of their countrymen in various capacities and actually hire white men for the most responsible positions. They engage immigrants from their own country for a few dollars a month, who stay with them until they earn some money and get a slight smattering of English and the next thing they do is to rent a piece of land and erect a small greenhouse. They already handle, together with the Chinese, fully seven-eighths of the chrysanthemum crop, both outdoor and under glass, and they bid fair to cut a wide swath in carnation and rose growing, both of which they are now actively engaged in. Of course it is out of the question for a white man to compete with them, owing to their manner of living.

The Japanese are natural horticulturists and have been content thus far to concern themselves with the growing of flowers and plants, but should they interest themselves in retailing and store trade it is hard to tell what might happen. They already have several small stores in Alameda, Oakland and San Francisco, where they retail at about half the usual rates. They are bound to become a factor in the business in the near future, which fact is deservedly viewed with considerable alarm by growers and retailers alike. G.

BEARDSTOWN, ILL.—Frank Bros. say Christmas trade was very good, especially in ferns and flowering plants. Palms were not in favor.

OSKALOOSA, IA.—The Times-Journal of December 19 contained a three-column illustrated write-up of the Kemble Floral Co., giving it the front page.

IOLA, KAN.—Harmon & Henderson report their Christmas business as double last year's. Everything sold out clean but the carnation was the favorite flower.

ROCKVILLE, IND.—H. B. Brubeck is highly pleased with his first Christmas. Wm. H. Ross is his grower. They are getting a nice crop of mushrooms from beneath the carnation benches and look upon it as the next thing to finding money.

WM. ANDERSON, of Brownwood, Tex., sent the REVIEW a box of mistletoe sufficient for the entire force and all their friends for Christmas. And it was good mistletoe, too. Mr. Anderson said he sent it because he was "highly pleased with results from my advertisement in the REVIEW."

PHOENIX FUNGUS.

I enclose a piece of a palm leaf and would like to know the nature of the disease with which it is infested, the cause and the remedy? R. F. G.

An examination of the specimen enclosed with this query shows quite plainly that the trouble in question is another case of the phœnix fungus, a fungoid development that has been noted several times in these columns.

There is no real specific for this fungus, from the fact that its growth takes place within the tissue of the leaf, and the wart-like protuberances that appear on the surface are due to the fungus pushing up its spore-bearing growths through an enlarged pore of the leaf.

The fungus seems to be encouraged by cool and damp treatment, and it is therefore thought best to keep the affected plants in a slightly higher temperature than usual, say 60 to 65 degrees, and not to syringe in cold and cloudy weather, also to ventilate as freely as the weather will allow. In other words, to encourage root action and general good health in order to grow the plant out of the disease as much as possible, though very bad cases seldom yield to treatment.

RED SPORT (Of Maceo.)

This new "Bread and Butter" commercial brilliant "Crane" Red Carnation, now in its fourth year, has the hardy constitution of General Maceo, with a stronger heavier growth, longer and stiffer stem and a larger flower. Growing under the same conditions and in the same house with Flamingo and Estelle it has produced four times as many blooms as the former and twice as many blooms as the latter. The color is as good as Estelle and the bloom brings as much as does Estelle at its best. Every flower is of a uniform brilliant red, perfectly double with an ideal calyx, in fact we never saw a split one.

Red Sport is perfectly healthy, an easy variety to grow, an early and continuous bloomer, throwing its heaviest cuts around the Christmas holidays and during the Winter months when red is in demand. Red Sport will keep longer and travel farther than any other red carnation, and will prove a bonanza to the grower who does a shipping business. If the scarcity of reds in the market that now exists continues Red Sport will pay better to the square foot of bench than any other variety of any color to date. Every florist who has seen Red Sport growing has placed an order for rooted cuttings, which tells the tale. All our stock is sold up to January 25th. Orders filled in strict rotation from that date on. Price, 12 for $1.50, 25 for $2.50, 50 for $4.00 all post paid. $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000, by express. We guarantee all cuttings to be well rooted and to arrive in good condition.

Announcement

We desire to say to those who may have anticipated purchasing stock of the Begonia Templinii, that owing to having had a serious accident with two of our steam heating boilers early in November, we lost a great portion of our Templinii stock, and we, therefore, are unable to supply the trade.

Since we have made the Templinii a distinctive feature of our 1905 retail catalogue, we will make a strenuous effort to meet our retail demands.

Very truly,

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Emil Bohnke instituted suit December 20 in the Circuit Court against J. W. Vestal and Charles Vestal for $10,000 damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained while at work in the defendant's greenhouses in Baring Cross. The plaintiff alleges that on November 11, 1904, he was employed by the defendants as a gardener and in doing his work was required to walk about the greenhouses on walks provided for that purpose; that the defendants negligently placed under such walks, to convey steam and hot water at high pressure, a pipe that was defective and in bad condition; that the defendants failed to inspect the pipe when put down and before covering it with three feet of dirt. He alleges that while at work his foot broke through the top of the ground and he dropped to his waist into a pool of hot water and mud, which had gathered by reason of the defective pipe.

The plaintiff alleges that he was severely scalded, his injuries incapacitating him from following his occupation, and that he suffered great pain of body and anguish of mind. He alleges that he was damaged to the amount of $10,000 and asks judgment for that amount.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

J. B. Braidwood has purchased the interest of William Clark in the greenhouses which bear the latter's name. The deal is one of the largest which has been consummated in Colorado Springs for years, as it involves a consideration of approximately $50,000. It is understood to cover the stock, good will and houses at the Platte and Wahsatch avenue establishments and the nurseries on Wood avenue.

The purchaser is a son-in-law of the former owner. He has been associated in the business for years and for some time has been its directing spirit. He is known as one of the most progressive of the younger business men of the city. The business was established in 1873.

Various Notes.

The Christmas of 1904 will be remembered as one of the best ever. Last year was considered a record breaker and we may sum up this year as being its equal and in many cases better. A fairly good supply of flowers was on hand at the Cleveland Cut Flower Co. and most orders were filled satisfactorily. Mr. Bate, of that firm, says their shipping was very good and the only shortage was in color, particularly red. They handled a large supply of Beauties from a local establishment, also a nice lot of carnations. The home demand was also good and Saturday night found the place cleaned up in fine style. A nice lot of poinsettias in pans and pots was handled by this concern.

The J. M. Gasser Co., wholesale end, was extremely busy and it was almost impossible to get a moment's interview with the efficient manager, Mr. Darnell. This part of the business is so well taken care of that it is increasing constantly. A fine lot of Beauties, teas, Chatenay, Gen. MacArthur and carnations, very fine mignonette, also orchids in variety, were on hand. A satisfactory Christmas trade was done. At the retail end Mr. Jones, who has charge, was so busy it was entirely out of the question to get a word from him.

Prices were the same as last year: Beauties from $1.50 to $12 per dozen; Brides, Maids and Meteors from $8 to $15; carnations, $4 to $8; extra fine Enchantress and Lawson went at the latter price; valley, $5 to $6; violets, $1.50 to $2; cut poinsettias, $3 to $4.

Frank Smith, of Smith & Fetters, was in the midst of the rush, having more than he could attend to. They had an exquisite display of seasonable stock and the volume of business accomplished is enormous. Mr. Smith says he has an abundance of orders on hand for the next two weeks to keep them quite busy.

Mr. Harrison, of Collins & Harrison, arose from a sick bed to attend to business. An extra nice lot of poinsettias, azaleas, ardisias, cyclamens, araucarias, etc., were very prettily decorated. The store presented a beautiful appearance and a rushing business was done. Beauties are a specialty here and great numbers were disposed of, as also good teas and carnations in proportion. This being the first Christmas on the avenue, they have no comparison to make, but say that business has been beyond their expectations.

Mr. Wagner, of Erie street, reports that this year is about equal to last, with a greater call for pot plants. A fine assortment of plants was on hand, which sold at good prices.

Miss Eadie was very busy and reports business equal to last year with a heavy demand for pot stuff.

The Cleveland Floral Co., of Euclid avenue, reports a good trade and is well satisfied.

We regret to learn of the illness of M. H. Harrison and trust he will soon be able to attend to business regularly. Overwork is the principal cause of the breakdown.

Isaac Kennedy, of West Park, is sending in some very fine Maids and Brides. The flowers of the sport of Bride are extra good.

Carl Hagenburger, of West Mentor, had some very fine poinsettias, both for cutting and in pans. His pans of poinsettias with Piersoni fern were very striking and sold readily.

S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, was a recent caller on the trade. He has booked several orders for that good white carnation, Fred Burki. He always has something good for the trade.

PLEASE discontinue my advertisement in the REVIEW; it sold for me all the chrysanthemum stock plants I have to spare for this year.—G. M. Naumann, Cleveland, O.

I LIKE the REVIEW and would not be without it. The only reason I did not advertise in it this season was that local trade took all the stock; did not have enough and had to buy through the advertisements in the REVIEW; that's where to look for what you want.—J. A. KENNISTON, Newburyport, Mass.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

This has been the busiest Christmas that this city has ever had. There was a steady demand for cut flowers and potted plants all week, but on Friday the rush commenced and did not slacken up until Sunday evening. On Saturday prices took an upward turn. Everything with a bloom was sold. There was an unusual demand for made up pots and pans filled with primroses, Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri. The supply of holly was soon exhausted.

Various Notes.

The most beautiful window in the city was that of Sam. Murray. Crowds thronged the street to see it. He had the finest specimen poinsettias, azaleas and Gloire de Lorraine ever seen in this city.

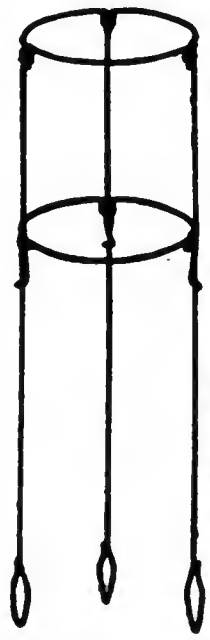
W. L. Rock was a close second in window display and his store was thronged with buyers until a late hour Saturday night.

The Alpha Floral Co. was forced to employ four extra salesmen and even then was unable to wait upon all who came to buy.

A. Freudenthal has his new store on Twelfth street tastefully decorated and got his share of what was coming.

Advance orders for New Year's are already being booked by some of the leading florists here.

An effort is being made to organize a florists' club here.



A. F. Barbe was swamped with business the past week and reports the best trade in years.

W. J. Barnes reports a rushing business the past week and disposed of a large stock.

Lawrence Schwager had a very tastefully decorated store and is thoroughly satisfied with the week's business.

Ed. Ellsworth, of Geo. M. Kellogg's, reports an immense wholesale business last week, but with an increased force easily got rid of all his stock.

F. A. Vandervoort, representing C. J. Speelman & Sons, of Holland, was a visitor here last week. NARCISSUS.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. THE HISTORY AND CULTURE OF

BY ALEXANDER MONTGOMERY, JR.,

COPYRIGHT, 1904, BY FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

The Various Stocks.

In comparing the desirability of the different stocks which could be made available, we have used the common dog rose or brier (Rosa canina), Rosa multiflora Japonica and De la Grifferae, Rosa Banksia and Manetti. In regard to results, there is such a vast superiority in the use of the Manetti that comparisons are of value only as a matter of interesting history.

The brier, the most popular stock used in the British Isles for the production of exhibition blooms, has already been mentioned.

Faults of Multiflora.

Multiflora has never proved satisfactory, never in fact being equal on the whole to own-root plants. While it is undoubtedly a vigorous grower, it does not seem to have the property of being able to transmit this quality to its scion and, moreover, we have never been able to produce a bloom from a multiflora graft that was equal in color to one from an own-root plant. But beyond all these objections, it seems to be extremely susceptible to the club-root caused by eel worms or nematodes, and this fact alone ought to make its use objectionable, for most rose growers of even limited experience know that it is only too easy to get club-root on own-root plants, without going to the trouble of grafting to get it.

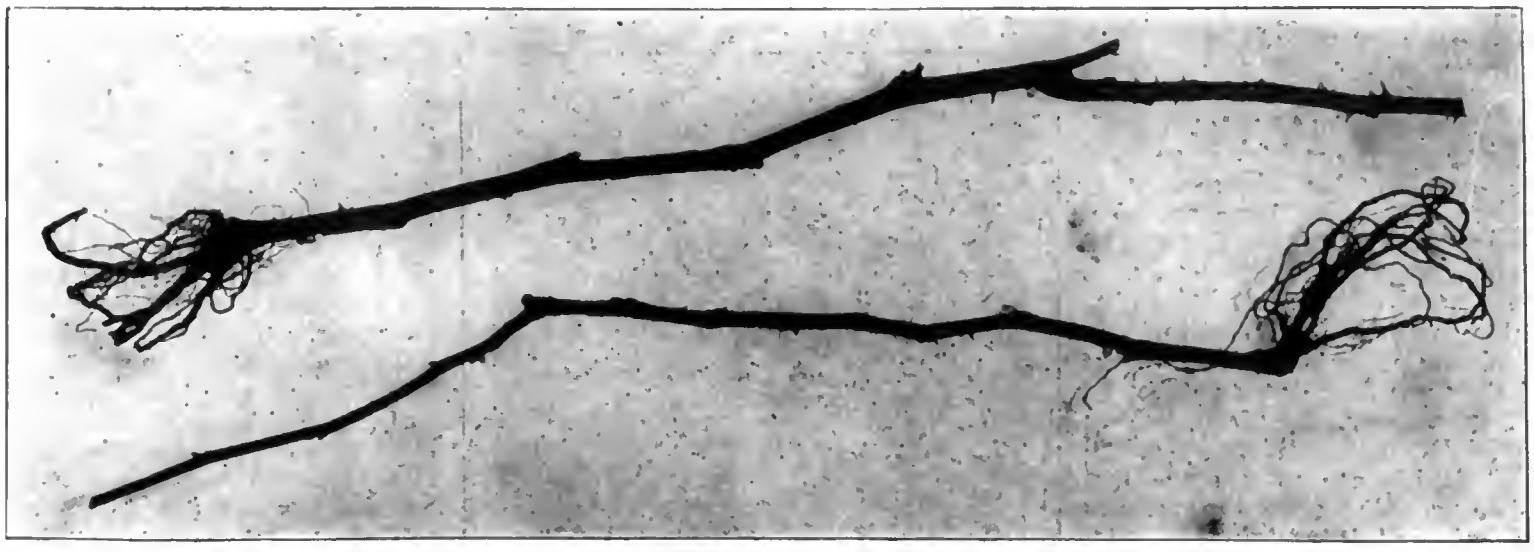
Experience With De la Grifferae.

De la Grifferae has been tried with a number of varieties. It is a vigorous stock and makes a perfect union, the finest, in fact, of any stock which we have ever tried, but still it produces a very inferior plant. Thinking perhaps that it might prove the thing for the yellow class—as, by the way, the Manetti has been a failure with roses of the Perle des Jardins type—we gave it a trial, using the variety Sunrise, planted in a solid bed. For the first four months they absolutely refused to move, merely keeping alive; then suddenly they began to pick up and show signs of increased activity. Suspecting what might be the cause of this new lease of life which the plants had taken, several of them were dug up and, sure enough, our judgment was correct: they had begun to send out own-roots from the callus at the union of stock and scion, while the stocks themselves had made practically no roots since the day they were put in.

Banksia for the Yellow Class.

The Banksia rose ought theoretically to be the ideal stock, as it is practically evergreen. This surely ought to suit our friends who rave about the Manetti not being the proper stock to use beeause it is not evergreen. However, it is not evergreen stocks we are looking for, but evergreen roses, on "any old" stock, so long as we get the blooms.

But the Banksia has proved valuable in our experience only in the case of the yellow class. As before mentioned, the Marechal Niel did fairly well on it. Again, as far back as 1889, the Waban Conservatories had a very fine house of Perle des Jardins on this stock and about that time Mr. Peter Boll, of Malden, had remarkable success with this rose on the Banksia. As our market does not take kindly to the yellow sorts, we have not done anything further in the way of experimenting with this stock, but if anyone who is growing some of the Perle class is not satisfied with it on its own roots, I would advise him strongly to try the Banksia rose as a stock for grafting.



Manetti the Successful Stock.

Finally we come to the Manetti and we can truly say that up to date this has proved itself to be the thing for nearly all roses grown under glass. That it has not proved itself better than the own roots with every variety we must all admit, and also even that in some exceptional localities it has proven a failure, but I think it will be found that where this is so the reason lies in the soil. It is generally conceded that the Manetti rose thrives in light to medium coarse gravelly loam, and is not seen at its very best in an exceptionally heavy, fine-grained, sticky or tenacious soil. The Manetti is a comparatively shallow fibrous-rooting rose. It has a voracious appetite and will in most cases stand considerably more feeding than roses on their own roots.

But, more than all this, the Manetti seems to be absolutely free from the attack of eel worms. This point alone ought to make it very valuable to those who are troubled with this pest, because roses grafted on the Manetti are practically insured against an attack of club-root. We do not know why this is so, and of course could not state positively that under certain conditions it would remain free from the dreaded nematodes, but we do know that up to the present time it has done so.

An objection which has been made against the use of roses grafted on the Manetti is the fact that any check during the late fall is liable to put the plants to sleep for the winter, but we all know that own-root roses are subject to the same defect if given half a chance. So, as it is the growers' business to see that they do not get a check, it does seem as though such a lame excuse as this ought not to frighten the wide-awake rosarian.

A point in favor of using the Manetti is found in the case of roses which are difficult to propagate on their own roots. Very often growers who have failed almost completely to propagate a rose have succeeded readily in grafting it on the Manetti. As a specific example, I recall seeing growers who could find no advantage in grafting American Beauty other than the fact that, having failed to get up a stock of plants on their own roots, they had succeeded in securing a fine lot on the Manetti.

Present Day Varieties.

We are growing Mrs. J. P. Morgan and Mrs. Oliver Ames on the Manetti, and have had some plants of Morgan in a solid bed as long as nine years with no apparent deterioration in the quality of the flowers, although after the fourth or fifth year there was a decrease in the quantity.

There has been some complaint of these varieties not doing well on this stock, a large percentage dying off, sometimes even when the plants are in their second year. While we have had some experience with this trouble, it has never bothered us to an alarming extent and we consider that the grafted plants are enough better to more than compensate for any slight loss. The cause of the defect seems to be that Morgan unites rather poorly with the stock and any poorly grafted plant, whether of Morgan or any other variety, is liable to canker at the union. The remedy would seem to be to use special care in grafting and to have the stock and scion very nearly the same size, so that the union will be practically perfect. We have tried Morgan on both De la Grifferae and the Banksia, but with unsatisfactory results.

Golden Gate, Ivory, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria and Souvenir du President Carnot are all grafted, but the difference between them and own-root plants is not so marked as with some other varieties. Still the many advantages possessed by grafts, rapidity of growth, freedom from club-root, and general adaptability to our soil, are worth more than the extra cost of grafting.

Liberty is so much better with us grafted that there is really no comparison. Yet, on the other hand, I have seen localities where the exact reverse was true; but this merely bears out the statement previously made that in deciding the question of grafted versus own-root plants each grower must be a law unto himself.

American Beauty is grown on its own roots. We have experimented with grafted plants and at the present time have a bed of Beauties on the Manetti, but as we have not yet seen any decided advantage in favor of either, and as this variety is such a vigorous grower on its own roots, we have not seen fit to declare our preference for grafts. There is one advantage, however, that the grafts have which may prove of considerable value. In starting up own-root plants after they have been dried off they are frequently subject to an attack of yellows, American Beauty being especially susceptible. Grafted Brides and Maids are very much less likely to be troubled with the yellows when grafted, and it will in all probability be found that, by putting Beauties on the Manetti, they can be grown successfully two or three years in the same soil with very little risk.

Bride and Bridesmaid are all grafted, and indeed since 1897 there has not been an own-root plant of these on our place.

Quality and Quantity.

It is unnecessary to go over again the advantages secured by grafting, but it may be well to make a few remarks on the quality and quantity of product. In regard to quality it can be said that with most varieties there will be a general improvement in all grades of the cut, and particularly in the medium and smaller grades. This is especially noticeable in the increased stiffness of the stems, while with some kinds there will be darker foliage and better-colored blooms. With Brides and Maids the highest quality is reached during the second year and rarely continues after the fourth.

As to quantity, figures are often misleading because numbers depend to such an extent on the method of disbudding; but, taking for example the system followed by growers who cater to the very critical markets of our larger cities, a house of own-root Brides or Maids that would average fifty flowers to the plant would be exceptional, but a house of grafted plants with an average of fifty would be only a good house and an exceptional one would go as high as seventy-five. These proportional figures will hold good up to the end of the third year, although the actual average per plant will generally fall off somewhat after the second year.

It seems to be the general opinion, among those who have never grown grafted stock, that the superiority over own-root is chiefly during the early autumn months. In order to dispel any such notion, I shall give the figures of the cut by months from a house of own-root roses, and also from the same house when planted with grafts. This is not a special case but only one of many which could be quoted to support our contention in favor of the Manetti. While these figures do not, of course, take into consideration the quality of the flowers, still, assuming that the grades are at least equal, and I believe it is generally admitted that they are, they present evidence which ought to satisfy the most skeptical.

Month—	Own-root.	Grafted.
August	6,899	8,653
September	11,317	20,950
October	11,614	9,325
November	10,373	16,558
December	5,829	8,503
January	7,277	10,653
February	4,958	6,775
March	7,634	9,997
Total	102,735	142,453

This is an interesting record for several reasons. It shows the same bench space to have produced practically forty per cent more flowers on grafted than on own-root plants, an increase calculated to command the consideration of even the most successful growers of own-root stock; and it shows the increase to be well distributed through the season, the month of December, for instance, showing an increased cut of nearly fifty per cent as compared with the house of own-root plants.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A DECORATOR'S OUTFIT.

Since decorations in flowers, plants and foliage must be done within a few hours of the time for some important social event, it behooves the decorator to consider not only his own convenience and dispatch, but the comfort of the patron also. By the time you arrive at the house to decorate stairways, mantels, woodwork, chandeliers, curtains and tables, the sweeping and dusting are all done. Before long disorder again prevails. You have moved in a step ladder and work table, displaced the furniture and scattered boxes and papers, smilax cases and plants, to the dismay of the hostess. If you do this unnecessarily, scarcely any housewife is too courteous not to remark about the litter and the extra work it will take to clear up after the decorator.

A Unique Bouquet.
(Made on order by Seekins & LeBorious, Duluth.)

To avoid all this, provide yourself with from two to six plain coarse bed sheets, such as can be had at about 50 or 60 cents apiece. Let them be sent with the load of palms, and before the plants or boxes are set on an oiled floor or rug, spread out a sheet to protect the same from marks and scratches. Set another under boxes and one under your work table and under the places where you are spreading out your smilax and where many leaves are likely to be dropped. Throw all your waste stems and clippings on one of these sheets, and with a little thought and care you can fold them, corners into center and leave scarcely a leaf to be brushed from the polished floor or rug when you have completed your work.

The sheets can also be used for screening off the show window in the store during the time when you are arranging an exhibit.

Store of Seekins & Le Borious, Duluth, Minn., during Christmas.

In the way of tools, have a pair of good, strong shears that will cut wire, picks, stems, etc., also ribbon scissors, which you allow to be used for nothing else but chiffon, tulle, cord, ribbon and other fabrics. Then you will need a tack hammer and some double pointed tacks, and once in a while a screw eye. Use tacks sparingly. It is scarcely ever necessary to drive one on the face of woodwork; instead set them on the top or sides of the moulding. If the top is too far away to attach a garland or spray of green, drive a tack on top and run a wire of the length needed, rather than deface the woodwork. Thought about these things may mean a little more stretching and climbing, but it is much better for your reputation as a careful worker.

Include in the outfit a paper of common pins for fastening light garlands of green or small clusters of flowers to curtain, table cloths, draperies, etc. Have a small coil of No. 36 wire, also one of No. 24. Sometimes you have use for hemp twine.

Among the first things called for will be a screen to hide a company of musicians. Be prepared for this with a few rattan screens obtained from some florists' supply house. Cover them with wild smilax or set a few tall palms in front of them. These are also useful for closing the entrance to a stairway, dining-room, or shutting off an unsightly view. They may even serve to good advantage for a background for a reception or wedding party.

When flowers must be set aside while greens and plants are being arranged, have some fiber vases at hand, so that they may be in water and appear at their best when needed. Set the flowers in these vases in some cool, retired corner, where they cannot be brushed against and where no draught of air can strike them.

For store use, as well as in decorative work, a strong cravenette apron is found to be of much service. Being waterproof is one of its virtues. Add to its convenience by stitching on a deep pocket, which will hold shears, hammer and tacks, and you can climb a ladder with your hands full of your decorative material and still have your tools at hand. Stitch off a narrow section of one side of the pocket for the tack hammer and it can be carried head up, ready.

Have a nobby leather bag or portfolio to carry the outfit in. There should also be room in this case for a pocket tape measure. The latter is more useful when taking the order and making the estimate on the price of a decoration.

It will be found easier to get up a satisfactory decorative plan after seeing the house, hall or church where it will be placed. There you can see colors of walls and their height, the amount of space available, the location of windows, stairways, doorways, the character of permanent decorations, such as frescoing, wood carving, draperies, etc., as well as make suggestions as to what other places should be decorated.

In any house where any pretentions are made to florists' decorations, for a wedding, for example, there are three places which should always receive some noticeable treatment. The first is some point opposite the entrance, where the guest's eye will rest first. The second is the place where the ceremony or reception takes place, and the third is the dining-room. Secure some consideration for these three places before suggesting any others. Then whatever subordinate features are introduced should be made connectedly, both in color and form, with the three principal points.

But to return to the outfit question. Wire or basket center-pieces, round and oblong, handle baskets of all sizes and prices, some of which have round bottoms without stands, are nowadays a necessary part of a florist's equipment. Perhaps there is no one receptacle for flowers for table decoration which is as deservedly popular as a prettily filled basket.

Another favorite decorative feature is a galvanized mantel pan. Have several of them of various sizes. Paint front and two ends black or very dark olive green. Fill with sphagnum moss, snugly and stem clusters of wood ferns and make as much like plants growing as your skill will allow. These same pans may be filled over and over again with any kind of flowers, attractive foliage, or banked full of plants.

Upon having inquiries for flowers for a table, ask whether they are for a dinner, luncheon, reception or banquet table; then get the size and shape of the table. A dinner or luncheon table may be round, square or long, and should be treated accordingly, as to shape of center-piece. A banquet table is usually a long one or a series of long ones. A reception table is round or square, or nearly so, and will take a high center-piece. The others should be low.

Do as much of the work for decorative jobs at the store as possible. Fill baskets and mantel pans with the sphagnum and stem the flowers. Often these pieces may be completed at the store. Also do all counting, sorting and trimming before starting.

It is a good practice to furnish all your own equipment, except a work table and step ladder. These can be had at any residence with little trouble. The less waiting upon you require at such busy times, the better will your skill be accounted.

A STORE AND A NOVELTY.

The illustration on page 355 shows the store of Seekins & LeBorious, at Duluth, as it appeared at Christmas. They did a fine business and increased their sales about fifty-five per cent as compared with the previous year. Red of course had the call. Poinsettias sold well. Red carnations were very scarce but red roses about met the demand. The way plants sold made one think of Easter.

One curious order they had was to make a "bouquet" of twenty-five one-dollar bills for a customer for delivery Christmas morning. It was certainly a novelty and they placed the "bouquet" among the flowers in one of their windows, where it attracted much attention, getting them a good write-up in one of the daily papers.

THE GOOD OLD YEAR.

"The king is dead; long live the king." The good old year is gone and our thoughts are directed toward the young year just at hand, but it is worth while to pause to review the work of 1904 and gather from it such lessons as we may for application to the tasks which lie before us.

For those of the cut flower trade, particularly in the great cities, 1904 was ushered in with no fair augury. In New York the stock market, that barometer of prosperity for the leading retail florists and hence for the wholesalers and producers, was flat on its back with a severe attack of indigestion. The symptoms pointed to the necessity for a major surgical operation but this, happily for the patient and the many sorrowing friends, was averted and by autumn the "spenders" were flush again. In Chicago the Iroquois theater disaster had put a quietus on all social activity just as 1903 went out and the effects of the blow dealt the retail flower business were apparent for many months, during which the shipping demand was the sole salvation of an over-loaded market. During the first few months of the year the flower business throughout the country felt the lassitude of the business depression general in other lines but the smaller the town and the farther west one went the less apparent was the check to retail demand.

The summer is always quiet as to cut flowers and in the autumn trade was slow in awakening but sudden frosts brought prosperity to the man with the house of early mums. Then came a quiet period up to the fall flower shows, since which the retail cut flower trade has struck its old gait. The quadrennial national election had less deterrent effect than usual this time.

The demand for cut flowers has shown a constantly widening market for high grade stock and a constantly narrowing market for the low grades, with growers in all the large centers keeping pace with the trend here indicated.

As to the holidays, Easter saw a very large business in practically all parts of the country, exceeding previous records and in the big cities affording a welcome oasis in a somewhat dry season. The lilies brought fair prices and all other cut flowers made good money, with good crops general. The call for flowering plants was large but there was no shortage. Decoration day was more important in a florist's view point than heretofore and it may be noted that this is a repetition of the experience of recent years. For memorial purposes quantity is more important than quality but the aggregate of sales is very large. Just after Decoration day came a tremendous crop of peonies, which sold cheaply. Thanksgiving is not a day which looms large on the florists' calendar but it marked the real awakening of the fall business and was generally satisfactory. Christmas is too fresh in mind to need much comment. The aggregate of sales was never greater but seldom were holiday demands more fully met. There was a weak market for white. Plants sold out clean if well grown. The tendency was to use little ribbon but many pot covers. Baskets and hampers of growing plants were great sellers. Azaleas did splendidly. This is a day for select stock and it brought fine prices.

With the general plantsmen the spring was a good one. The call for geraniums was never greater and everything in flower by the end of May was sold. In some places bedding stock sold up to the end of June. Vincas, ivies and echeveria were in short supply. Bedding roses never sold better and stocks of leading varieties were cleaned up early. Cannas started in pots did not go around. More pansy plants were wanted. Many peonies were planted in the spring and a great many more in the fall.

The rooted cutting specialists found a big sale for carnations but no great call for roses, nor did young rose plants in pots sell as in 1903, possibly due to the growing tendency toward carrying stock two or more years. Chrysanthemum cuttings never sold better. Field-grown carnation plants did not clean up; in the middle west many thousands were left to freeze up.

The dealers in novelties had a good year. In new roses the offerings were limited and sales not phenomenal but an even larger number of new carnations than usual was offered and all have found buyers in such quantities as to hold out incentive for continued activity on the part of the growers. The growing popularity of the carnation affords every incentive to grow the improved sorts.

Greehouse builders have some interesting comparisons to make between the construction of new glass in 1904 and in 1903. Almost without exception they report a small falling off, but a further examination shows that the decrease from the usual amount of building in the big cut flower centers, particularly in Cook county, Illinois, was considerably more than the aggregate falling off in the whole country, so that, while the big cut flower growers did less building than usual, the general florists throughout the country built more than usual.

A notable and perhaps the most important feature of the year was the great awakening of public interest in things floricultural. The fall flower shows were unusually successful and the general publications of all classes are giving more space than ever before to the affairs of our craft and to gardening topics. This should receive every encouragement at our hands and we should see to it that whenever possible the press is supplied with sane matter pertaining to our trade and our wares, for the power of the press as a developer of any industry can scarce be over estimated.

Christmas Plants at Alex. McConnell's, New York.

MUM MISS WINNIE TERRY.

The notes last week regarding Miss Winnie Terry were a little bit misleading in speaking of this as one of the Wells set for 1904. While Mr. Wells helped distribute the stock, the variety was raised in England by Wm. Bryant and should not be confused with the Australian-raised Wells-Packett set which have been uniformly good in their behavior in this country.

It is undoubtedly climatic conditions that are responsible for the fact that many varieties that are fine when grown in England are useless here. I have noticed this for years in importing and when one buys a variety solely on aecount of its European record he is apt to be disappointed.

Such in their day were Edith Tabor and Vicar of Leatherhead, both grand yellows over there. Elsie Fulton, a white, imported two years ago, is a magnificent thing in England, yet here it shows a big eye and not one bloom in ten is presentable. Mrs. J. Dunn imported this year has been called a white F. S. Vallis this fall in English periodicals. This would make it one of the largest varieties grown, yet Dunn with us, while neat and pretty, is far too small for our exhibition standard. True, it does not show an eye, which is the usual fault, but why this difference in size? The only thing to do, apparently. is to keep on importing and any kind that will not stand our "strenuous life" must be regretfully deposited on the rubbish heap. BRIAN BORU.

PROPAGATING MUMS.

Will chrysanthemum cuttings taken from the stumps already rooted give as good a flower as if rooted in sand?

W. W.

There is no earthly reason why they should not give just as good flowers as though they had been rooted in sand. They will, of course, be very early and will need topping several times before planting time but this, if properly done. does not detract any from the value of the plant, and the tops can be rooted and used to increase the stock. From March onward is as early as propagating need be done for commereial use. B. B.

QUANTITY OF COAL.

There seems to be an even greater variation than was thought in the number of pounds of coal required to heat a given area of glass. Of course, age and exposure of houses counts, as well as quality of coal.

One large grower north of Chicago states that burning Pocahontas coal took approximately fifteen pounds for each square foot of glass exposure to carry him through the winter of 1903-4.

Another grower near Chicago writes that he uses a southern Illinois coal which costs him $2.55 a ton f. o. b. Chicago and it took thirty-two pounds for each square foot of glass to carry him through the past season, carrying the houses at 50 to 52 degrees at night.

We should be glad to hear from others with the quantities and qualities of coal required. Much valuable information seems likely to be gained by a comparison of notes.

ANOTHER COAL MAN.

In this issue of the REVIEW we begin the publication of the advertisement of another coal dealer, the firm, Castner, Curran & Bullitt, being one of the leaders in its field, with offices at New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati and other cities. Theirs is Pocahontas smokeless coal and they already do a large business with those in our trade, shipping 600 to 1,000 cars a year from the mines in West Virginia to the florists north of Chicago, including several of the largest cut flower and vegetable growers. Last season this firm sold Peter Reinberg 7,000 tons of this coal. Florists differ as greatly on the question of the best fuel as they do on the subject of the best white carnation, but the United States Government has adopted this grade of Pocahontas coal as the standard for grading all steam fuel. It is the standard fuel for the warships of the United States Navy.

When you are in the market for coal address the nearest office of Castner, Curran & Bullitt for prices on Pocahontas and for literature on its heating value. Mention the REVIEW when you write.

CROTONS.

Please give the right treatment for crotons. I bought some nice small plants last spring and they did nicely until of late, when many of them have died. I have kept them in pots all summer, repotted them this fall in good soil, such as I use for begonias—black loam, sand and a little manure. Is this all right or too light? Do they require more heat than begonias? They stand on the bench where they do well. L. M. B.

These crotons should be in a temperature of not less than 66 degrees and shquld get plenty of water if the drainage is good. It is a safer plan to defer potting crotons till the spring growth commences. They should be placed on a bench with full exposure to the sun.

FORCING LONGIFLORUMS.

On December 8, W. & N. gave their experience in forcing of Japan longiflorum bulbs. To start, I am not elaiming to be an expert or an authority on forcing bulbs, but in the past I claim to have grown as fine longiflorums as I have ever seen. A few years ago I had the very same trouble as W. & N. At Christmas I found my lilies had not started one iota, so I tried this experiment. I brought them in the full light and heat, 50 degrees at night and 65 degrees in the day to start and increased the heat a trifle. At Easter they were beautiful, four to ten blooms and many over three feet high. Last season some of them were a little late on account of Easter being a little early or running my house a little cool. This season I potted my lilies and brought them in the full light and heat about November 1 and they are just coming through the ground nicely and pots well filled with roots. By running at about the same temperature as carnations they will come in full swing about April 15 to 20. Now this is my experience. I would not dare to say for everyone to follow it, but I make a success in this way and would advise anyone getting in the same fix as W. &. N. to give them a trial and I am safe in saying they will not be in the back row at Easter regarding blooms.

SEASONABLE HINTS.

As the season advances and the bushes become stronger they will require more nourishment to mature the crops and this should be given to them just as soon as it is required.

During the busy season of propagating potting, etc., when so many crops are calling for attention, the rose benches, if they continue to do fair work, are frequently neglected in the matter of food and it is only after a crop shows signs of deterioration that the nourishment is given. Of course this is too late to do any good to that particular crop and it must be remembered that once starve a rose and it takes a long time to regain its vitality and if the food is given to the plant in large or strong doses while in this exhausted condition it is almost certain to give them dyspepsia or sour stomach. To provide against the plant suffering from want of food a light, rich mulch should be given and when the weather is bright this can be supplemented with liquid feeding.

If plants have been forced by raising the temperature previous to the holiday season, it is best and safest to lower this gradually until the normal is again reached; any sudden drop in temperature is bound to check the growth and cause trouble.

Keep the shoots tied up and the bench clear of dead and decaying leaves, for without cleanliness and fresh air it is impossible to produce good roses.

After protracted dull weather, when it is next to impossible to use the syringe with freedom, spider will be apt to increase and should be looked after carefully. Where there are any hot corners, there the spider is sure to lurk and if not destroyed will soon give trouble. A judicious use of the syringe will repay at this season.

By this time there should be no mildew; if there is any, it is the result of carelessness or neglect as any ordinary precaution will keep the houses clear of this pest at this season when there is a command of heat.

Fumigating once a week will under ordinary conditions keep green fly in check and if some red pepper is burned in the houses once a week there will be little trouble from thrips.

Care in watering, keeping an even temperature and judiciousness in ventilating will tide us over the short days and keep the stock from losing vitality till the sun gets higher and gives them more activity both in root and foliage.

Ribes.

MARECHAL NIEL.

Please tell me what to do with a large Marechal Niel rose I have in my greenhouse. It is in the ground and about ten feet high. It does not bloom enough to pay me for the room it occupies. It was cut back to six feet last spring and did fairly well. It gave one crop last summer and since then has been at a standstill and scarcely exists. I have given it wood ashes and a little lime, also liquid manure at different times. Would be glad for any information. L. M. B.

When Marechal Niel roses get too old they sometimes take a fit like this, possibly due to exhaustion of the soil, or the roots may have reached into some unsuitable food, and then they had better be thrown out.

If you still wish to retain the plant it would be advisable to dig around it and remove the old soil, give it a root pruning and fill in with a good compost. Ribes.

SPIDER ON PLANTS.

I send you some leaves from American Beauty and wish your expert would tell me through the Review what is the matter with them. They have been growing in 6-inch pots since the first of October and did finely up to the first of December, since which time they seem to have stood still and lost their leaves. I watered them with liquid manure up to December 1 and have them in a house with a temperature of 54 to 60 degrees at night and from 60 to 75 degrees in the day time, but they do not need any more water, as we do not get any more sun and they do not dry out. Please let me know how to handle them so that I get from four to six roses on them each before Easter. I would like to sell them in pots at Easter. P. J. K.

These Beauties are suffering from a very bad dose of red spider. Look carefully on the under sides of the leaves and you will find them covered with a very small and lively mite and the whole surface covered with a fine web. To remedy this syringe the under sides of the leaves every day and use sufficient force to dislodge the spider and break up the web.

Until you get them back to health do not use liquid or any other food, as this will aggravate the trouble. Ribes.

TROUBLE WITH SOIL.

Will you please examine this rose foliage and let me know what is the matter with it? It is two months that I have been with this plant. The man who was florist before I took hold of it, so the owner of the plant says, used lime by the wholesale and the soil shows it. I have tried all my remedies but cannot stop the foliage from burning and leaves falling. The soil the other florist used was black gumbo and the proprietor says he was making the soil for months. My houses run 55 to 60 degrees nights, 65 to 70 degrees days, with plenty of air. The houses were full of red spider and mildew when I took them, but have conquered that, but cannot stop this burning and the leaves falling.

The benches were water soaked when I took the plant. All the roses out of benches in pots do well and I set out some Perles since I came here out of the common soil and they are doing well. J. H. W.

From the appearance of these leaves it seems to me that there must be something wrong with the drainage. Gumbo soil, which I have tested several times, I do not consider at all fit to grow roses in, and especially if overdosed with lime. The treatment you are giving them is all right and if the soil and drainage were good they ought to respond. I should advise running them rather on the dry side for some time and refrain from feeding.

You have not had much time yet, during the most torpid period, to know if your treatment is to be effective, so I would continue it until the spring growth commences, when without doubt you will have better results. Avoid if possible using gumbo soil in the future. Ribes.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Early Propagation.

While it is somewhat early to begin propagation in earnest, it is none too soon to start the slower growing sorts, for with this class, unless good sized plants can be had at housing time, the returns come too late to be profitable.

Because large plants are needed when housed, it does not follow that the young stock must be so when planted out. The idea of early propagation is not so much to secure large plants as it is to provide a period of partial rest. Letting the rooted cuttings into soil early and gradually working them into a lower temperature will produce a natural, slow, sturdy growth and of course to follow this plan it will be necessary to provide a place separate from the blooming plants, also to use soil free from manure or other fertilizers. Rotted sod is the ideal thing for this purpose as it contains the necessary elements to support the desired growth; besides the danger of fungous diseases obtaining a foothold is reduced to a minimum. Young stock handled in this manner makes rapid strides as the weather warms up and when planted in fertilized soil on the benches or in the field takes hold at once.

Another advantage of a slow growth is that we obtain a short-jointed plant, the proper foundation of a shapely habit.

From recent inquiries I feel constrained to caution growers against too strong forcing or heavy feeding. The only possible result will be sick plants, producing if at all only small, sleepy blooms with weak stem. Then to propagate from such plants is not in the line of improvement.

Next week I hope to give news of a new disease which is appearing in this section on Lawson. GEO. S. OSBORN.

A HALSTEAD SEEDLING.

Dr. A. S. Halstead, of the St. Clair Floral Co., Belleville, Ill., has a seedling carnation of which he thinks highly and which he proposes to exhibit at the Carnation Society's convention in Chicago this month. It is snow white, a seedling of Lizzie McGowan and Alaska. It blooms continuously and never bursts the calyx. The flower is an average of three inches in diameter and borne on stems eighteen to twenty inches long. Two days before Christmas a bench of it looked like a bank of snow and these were late planted, being benched the middle of October. The accompanying illustration shows the character of the bloom. Dr. Halstead says the variety is as easily propagated as its pollen parent, McGowan.

BOSTON, Jan. 3.—Cucumbers, select, $8 to $13 box; seconds, $1.50 to $6 box; tomatoes, 35c lb.; lettuce, 25c to 35c doz.; radishes, 35c doz. bunches; mint, $1.25 doz. bunches; mushrooms, 50c to 60c lb.; asparagus, $4 doz. bunches.

CUCUMBERS.

What is the best cucumber for forcing? When should the seed be started to have them in crop by April 1? What is the culture? J. H. T.

The best variety to grow is White Spine. By sowing at once you may be able to get cucumbers fit for use by April 1, but you will not be able to have your plants in full bearing by that time. Plant two or three seeds in a 2-inch pot in a light, free and finely sifted soil. Place in a good bottom heat and give no more water than is necessary to keep the soil moist. If the soil is kept wet the seeds will be sure to rot. After the seedlings are up select the strongest plant in each pot and pull the others out. Gradually expose to air and light and when the plants have attained sufficient size to fill the pots with roots, move up into 4-inch pots. When they have used up the soil in the 4-inch pots they should be planted in the benches.

Don't fill the benches all at once, but make a hill of a few shovelfulls of soil and set them in this; later, when the roots appear on the outside of the hills, more soil can be added. Planting thus in hills often averts a good deal of trouble from stem rot, which is caused by the soil around the necks of the plants getting too wet. An open, fibrous soil is best for cucumbers with about one-quarter of well rotted manure added.

A night temperature of not less than 65 degrees, with a rise by day of 15 to 20 degrees is required. Atmospheric moisture is necessary to the health of the plants and frequent syringing must be given to keep the plants free from insects. Pollination of the flowers is necessary to insure a crop, regarding which please see article in FLORISTS' REVIEW, issue of December 8. If the plants are set about three feet apart it will give ample space for the lateral or side shoots, which must be depended on to produce the fruit. When they have covered the space allotted to them they should be stopped to prevent crowding and the points of the main shoots should be pinched out when they reach the top of the trellis.

The Market.

Everything taken into consideration, Christmas trade this year was all that could have been desired. By far the greater part of the retail stores report trade as being fine and the wholesale houses report the same. As is usually the case, red flowers were far from being plentiful enough to fill orders. The supply of Beauties was not as heavy as one might expect and a few orders were unfilled.

Maids of course had the call over Brides but after they had been all cleared out the latter went as well and on Sunday the market was entirely cleared out. Carnations sold well, even white being taken in a hurry. Some very good stock was on the market. Lilies and all bulbous stock sold at fine prices. The violet market was fair but owing to some of the stock arriving in very bad shape it had to be sold at a low price to move it at all.

Of the outdoor decorative stock there seemed to be any quantity and it could be bought very reasonably too. There was no scarcity in good holly as was expected. Christmas bells never sold better and many reported that they could have used many more. Blooming plants also sold very well; in fact, much better than last year.

Altogether Christmas brought very good business. I do not believe that the aggregate is much ahead of last year, yet, if you will remember, last year was a high water mark.

At present stock of all kinds is scarce and sells at sight, good stock being especially in demand.

Saturday, January 4, is the next meeting of the Florists' Society.

Theo. Bock is out with his calendar as usual and it is a very pretty one.

MAXILLARIA LUETO-ALBA.

The accompanying illustration of Maxillaria luteo-alba is reproduced from a photograph taken at the establishment of Harry G. Selfridge, Lake Geneva, Wis. C. H. Gebhardt, the head gardener, supplies the following descriptive and cultural note:

"Pseudo-bulbs ovate, oblong, two inches long; leaves broadly lingulate, fifteen to twenty inches long; flowers large and fragrant; sepals linear, oblong, three inches long, white at the base, the remainder tawny yellow, reddish purple behind; petals similar but narrower; lip three lobed, the side lobes erect, whitish streaked with dark purple on the inner side.

"This is a fine plant, of easy culture. I wonder why it is not frequently seen in private collections. It is from New Granada. We pot them when the new roots begin to appear, in a compost two-thirds osmunda roots, one third sphagnum moss, two-thirds broken pots at the bottom. After potting we water sparingly until they root freely, when we give more water until the new growth is ripe. We shade heavily in summer and give plenty top and bottom ventilation. We keep them in our Mexican house and they do well."

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.—M. A. Maxiner has built a range of up-to-date greenhouses and opened a store at 345 Pine street.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The supply of flowers was not so large at New Year's as the week before. Prices, which fell immediately after Christmas, were well maintained on nearly all good stock until after Tuesday. The demand on Friday, Saturday and Monday was excellent, a number of entertainments and weddings augmenting the regular New Year's demand for presents.

There has been great activity in political circles. The opening of the state legislature at Harrisburg, the installation of several new city officials here and a like occurrence in Camden called for many floral tributes from admiring friends, Senator Vare being especially fortunate.

Beauties and Liberties were popular. All roses are in demand. The receipts of carnations have been larger than any other flower. The demand is for the fancies; poorer grades do not sell to advantage. Violets are not in demand and prices are declining. Bulbous flowers do not sell well.

Craig Creditors to Choose.

John Burton, assignee of Robert Craig & Son, has called a meeting of the creditors of that firm for 3 o'clock on Thursday, January 12, at Forty-ninth and Market streets, to consider two proposals: First, the acceptance of 50 cents on the dollar for their claims, payable on or before June 15; second, the exchange of the claims for stock in the proposed Robert Craig Company.

A Chat With Mr. Stroud.

Edward A. Stroud, whose splendidly equipped plant at Strafford has been the Mecca for carnation growers during the past year, is a grower of the modern school, with ideas well worth knowing. The Strafford place is sending extra fine blooms to this market, blooms that at Christmas brought the highest prices. Phil was fortunate in meeting Mr. Stroud at S. S. Pennock's the other evening—Mr. Stroud believes in posting his commission merchant on what he is about to ship to him—and gleaned some facts and ideas that may interest the growers.

Of some twenty of the best varieties planted last season the most profitable were, first, Enchantress; second, Alpine Glow; third, Mrs. Lawson; fourth, May Naylor; fifth, Henry Fenn, sixth, Genevieve Lord; seventh, Mrs. Francis Joost; eighth, Prosperity. Quality is considered of paramount importance. No effort is spared to have only the best flowers, which the retailers will welcome as above the average and depend upon for their best customers.

Christmas forcing is not favored, as it tends to lower the vitality of the plants and as a consequence the quality of the product. While unprofitable varieties are, of course, discarded, the aim is to have a score of the best sorts, covering all the colors and shades of color popular with flower lovers, as it is found that one variety helps to sell another. Some thought has been devoted to an improved shipping box, but as yet with no practical results.

The Green Leaf.

Mark B. Mills is authority for the statement that the green leaf tag now used on boxes of growing plants sent by express has led to an improvement in the promptness with which these perishable goods are forwarded. Mr. Mills states that on receiving a box with the green leaf on it, the express companies at once notify their agent at the point of destination to be on the lookout for the box and to forward it promptly. Notices to the same effect are also posted in the large express offices. It is gratifying to know that this result of the combined effort of the leading shippers has been successful in minimizing the disastrous delays that now and then attend the transportation of our perishable products.

A Christmas Story.

Phil has been a bit criticised now and then for saying that the growers as a class didn't know how to sell stuff. It is absolutely true, nevertheless. Who would think of contradicting the statement that the wholesalers do not know how to grow stuff? One statement is quite as true as the other. A story told the other day will admirably illustrate the point.

A certain grower had an exceptionally heavy Christmas cut of, let us say, Prosperity. He carried the stuff to town himself to his best customer, whom he greeted with effusion. To his surprise the retailer did not seem particularly glad to see him, looked dubiously at his heavy load and remarked several times that business so far was not what it should be. The grower felt very uneasy. What if his Prosperities should be declined? He had so many, no one else might want them. He had intended asking, we will say, $15 a hundred but decided that $10 would be safe. The good ones were all accepted, but the grower's satisfaction was somewhat marred before he left town. Business began to improve at a lively rate and he saw his Prosperities retailed at $3.50 a dozen.

Various Notes.

M. Rice & Co. are going to introduce some high class novelties the coming season, which no doubt will be winners, and should be seen by all progressive florists.

William J. Muth, manager of the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co., was elected a member of the Florists' Club last Tuesday evening.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society has increased its dues for 1905 from $3 to $5 per year.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving fine white sweet peas, also single daffodils.

The Cut Flower Co. is receiving superb mignonette.

DENVER.

Christmas trade opened at a much earlier date than usual and under more favorable conditions. The weather was all that could be desired and stock was in the best condition, which resulted in doing the best plant trade ever known here at holiday time. Probably three-fourths of the Christmas tokens used in the floral line out here are blooming or attractive foliage plants and the more attractive they become from year to year the more they are sought after and appreciated by the flower lover and valued by the cultivator. In this department the wholesale men were cleaned out early in the week. Contrary to previous experience, Begonia Lorraine had a big run and those who overlooked its value as a holiday plant, and some who last year were not satisfied with the results attained, are now quite chagrined. There is no question about its value as a money maker when well done. Cyclamens also have increased in popularity and are more in demand every year. Few plants have improved in variety more than the cyclamen and few plants will give better returns when well done. Poinsettias had an unprecedented sale and, although the stock was fully fifty per cent more than previous years, the most were disposed of. Those grown in pans from the later propagations, found ready sale. Azaleas sold readily, some of the growers having the best specimens ever seen here. Mardner, when not over forced and allowed to retain its beautiful color, is certainly the best seller. Primulas, both Sinensis and obconica, when grown in low pans are quite an acquisition at Christmas time and sell fairly well. Bulb stuff was rather scarce. There were some good Harrisii lilies and Paper White narcissi and some very unsatisfactory valley.

There was an ample supply of cut flowers, excepting Beauties, which were exhausted much earlier than other flowers. Probably their cheapness created the early demand. Top notchers sold for $12 and shorter varieties went as low as $5. Bride, Maid and Chatenay brought from $2 to $4 and Liberty slightly higher. In carnations, Enchantress, Flamingo, Indianapolis and White Lawson brought $2 per dozen and ordinary good varieties went as low as $1. Violets sold at $4 per hundred but many a purchaser paid this price with considerable reluctance.

Christmas greens, such as holly, lycopodium and California pepper had an enormous sale this year, the largest portion of it being done by the street corner vender.

Store window decorations, while not showing much originality, were very attractive. Scott showed what could be done in red and both his windows were elaborately arranged in this color. Bells, poinsettias, natural and artificial, red lights etc., in profusion had the desired effect of attracting the masses.

The Park Floral Co.'s window, while not so elaborate, was neatly arranged with poinsettias and California peppers shaded with red lights. The pepper was used as a drapery on the grill work surrounding the upper portion of the window and held its foliage and berries well through the week. This store was completely lined with holly from ceiling to wainscoting and looked fine when seen under the influence of electric light.

GREAT DIVIDE.

DES MOINES, IA.

Ye scribe took a run among the craft today and found them well satisfied with Christmas sales; that is, they all sold out what they had, and that is all one could ask. In fact, Christmas trade was better this year than last, with prices about the same or better on some things. Holly and greens were to be had at the grocer and butcher and the florists here do not expect much demand for them.

I first stopped at J. F. Marshall's to see his new house. It is a beauty. He has it planted with Prosperity and McGowan. I expect some of you will laugh at this, for we realize that McGowan is a back number, but when it pays better at $2 per hundred than Prosperity at $5, then the laugh is on the other fellow, for it is dollars we are after and Mr. Marshall grows that which produces the most dollars. Just here let me say that he has a new carnation grower at his house, or will have in after years if all goes well, but at this writing he is only one week and one day old.

We next touched at Julius Ledig's and the greeting we got was, "We sell all we can grow." His mums are followed with a crop of lettuce and this to be followed with bedding plants. His carnations are fine, but his roses are backward on account of mildew.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The New Year hardly caused a ripple on the floricultural sea. Saturday was an exceptionally good Saturday and that was about all the extra indication of the coming of the glad New Year. There was no over supply, no pickled stock and no unnatural prices. Monday was peaceful and restful. The majority of the wholesalers closed their doors and started for the bosoms of their families at 1 o'clock. By 3 p. m. every curtain was rung down and peace and quiet prevailed. Most of the retailers were still open when the evening shadows fell, but there was "nothin' doin'."

It was one of the quietest New Year's on record. A London fog and spring temperature were unseasonable and depressing. The January thaw was promptly on time. There seems to be little left in the plant line in any of the stores. Inquiry of their proprietors indicates one of the best Christmas seasons in the city's history. Prosperity was general. There has been no honest complaining as to results. Everybody did well and all start the New Year cheerfully. The indications are favorable for four of the best months the business has ever known here.

Just at present shipments of cut flowers from the growers are light and good prices have been easily maintained. Violets do not show the animation expected and they have to be specials indeed to command over $1 per hundred. Doubtless as the week progresses quite a reduction from New Year's quotations will be made. The out of town demand for orchids continues. A great many are shipped daily. Cypripediums were too abundant and severe cuts were necessary to move them. There seems to be a limitless supply of carnations. If abundance is an indication of sovereignty, then the carnation is surely king.

As to the future, the general opinion is optimistic and all branches of the business seem to start the new year with ambition and hope in the ascendancy and expectation of a successful year almost universal.

Various Notes.

All members of the New York bowling club are requested to attend a special meeting to be held at the club's alleys, West Thirtieth street, Monday afternoon, January 9. The club will bowl from 3 to 7 p. m., prior to the regular meeting of the New York Florists' Club. Any exhibit of novelties in plants and flowers will be welcomed and these may be sent in care of Secretary John Young and will be properly staged for the evening's display. A large attendance is anticipated. The installation of officers will take place and many interesting features will make the inaugural meeting one of special value to all. To surpass the average attendance of 1904, it is quite desirable that no less than 100 be on hand on Monday evening.

A wave of grippe, bronchitis and pneumonia has been sweeping over New York and vicinity during the past two weeks and few of the trade have escaped a dash of the spray, while many have been thoroughly submerged and some are on the sick list still. Some of the best bowlers are among them. Matches are close at hand with the clubs of Hoboken, Flatbush and Madison and it behooves these old standbys to brace up rapidly. So far the club has almost an unbeaten record. It was a cold night at Madison and the New Yorkers simply found it impossible to warm up in a strictly temperance town, but that was the first and last defeat of the season.

Theo. Lang, the captain of last year's aggressive aggregation, will roll with the club during the balance of the year. Only the best bowlers will uphold the club's prestige in the remaining matches. Several large balls and decorations to come ought to put nerve into Mr. Lang's good right arm and keep his average over the 200. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BUFFALO.

It's about time I awoke from the hybernating state and joined the procession. Seven weeks' rest, mostly on my back, has not refreshed me any, but I am getting there fast.

My brief report of Christmas doings is a week behind your other correspondents, but there is an advantage in that, as I get the benefit of all the reports and can at least strike an average. The Buffalo trade seems to have been most satisfactory, while we believe some of the leading stores can truthfully say that their business was a considerable advance on any previous year. Taking the whole city through, we don't think the aggregate of business done was much if any, ahead of last year. First of all the weather could have been 500 times better: Cold early in the week; then a thaw on Friday, leaving the streets bare; then on Saturday, the great plant delivering day, a drop to a few degrees above zero. We think plants were rather a bigger business than cut flowers. Bouquet green was in large demand for many purposes and was well cleaned up. Holly was an oversupply in spite of the immense quantity sold and with the exception of a case here and there it was of very poor quality. With the help of the ilex berries it made wreaths and everybody wanted one and some a score.

It's not easy to say what flower took the lead. First-class roses were scarce. Colored carnations were in great demand, especially red. Violets went rather slowly. They reach rather too elevated a price in this city. In plants also there may be a difference of opinion which was the most popular. We know that Begonia Lorraine, azaleas, ericas and poinsettias in all shapes sold well and cyclamens and other cheaper plants all went off. One man expressed it by saying: "Everything sold well."

W. J. Palmer & Son had a grand cut of Liberty rose, which sold at retail for $9 per dozen. They also had immense quantities of their Red Lawson carnation, just the thing for the season.

S. A. Anderson had a grand lot of Lorraine begonias and poinsettias.

Miss Rachel Rebstock made a brilliant show of everything desirable in the market. J. H. Rebstock, H. Keitsch & Son, Byrne Bros. and L. H. Neubeck and the other Main street florists made fine displays and are well satisfied with results. From a few days before Christmas up to date there has been a succession of society events of some magnitude, which has kept one or another firm busy and incidentally helps all.

During our retirement it happened, we believe, that few florists visited our town, but on Christmas day we were invited to go down-stairs to speak by telephone to Jimmy Fiancee Hartshorne, the honorable president of the American Carnation Society, who was passing through Buffalo. We would have liked to very much, but we felt just then that if we were given the startling news that the ark with Noah as commodore was sailing down the icy surface of Lake Erie, we should not have gone to the window "to have a look." W. S.

BROCKTON, MASS.

Christmas trade was very satisfactory in every way and there was a substantial increase in sales as compared with 1903. The demand for flowering plants was exceptionally strong. A good many foliage plants were also sold. In cut flowers carnations were easily the leaders. There was also a good call for violets, roses, lilies and other seasonable flowers.

W. W. Hathaway, on Main street, kept eight clerks busily employed for several days prior to Christmas. He estimated his store trade at twenty-five per cent over 1903. In holly and wreathing, sales were very large. Flowering plants sold finely, including Lorraine begonias, azaleas, poinsettias, solanums, primulas, cinerarias and cyclamens. In cut flowers, roses sold well, chrysanthemums rather slowly. Of carnations and violets there were not enough to go around. Mr. Hathaway notes an increasing call for orchids. Of these he has been making weekly displays in his windows.

C. A. Reed, on Main street, did a big trade in flowering plants and was practically cleaned out. Lorraine begonias, Roman hyacinths in pans, azaleas and primulas were favorites. Palms and fern dishes also sold well. Holly and other green stuff were in brisk demand. Violets, roses and carnations were the best selling flowers. Christmas bells also went well. Sales were fully twenty-five per cent greater than a year ago.

Mrs. Moir, on Center street, had a very attractive Christmas display in her windows. In plants she had an extra good sale for Lorraine begonias, primulas, palms and fern dishes. Carnations and violets were the favorites with cut flower buyers.

Thomas Greaves, at the Crawford Greenhouses, had a big crop of carnations of fine quality in for the holidays, also a fine general assortment of other flowers. All of Mr. Greaves' flowers are handled by C. A. Reed.

Harry Cole, at the Copeland Greenhouses, Campello, had a fine Christmas trade for his first year in business. In addition to carnations and other staples he had a nice cut of cattleyas and cypripediums, which were readily disposed of at good prices.

One of the dry goods stores made a feature of Boston ferns and Asparagus plumosus, of which they appeared to dispose of a good number.

W. B. Arnold, Rockland, is shipping a fine lot of his new Variegated Lawson carnation to the local stores.

W. N. CRAIG.

RICHMOND, IND.—The Advance Co. was granted a patent December 6, on a new ventilating apparatus which it intends soon to put on the market.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEB.—H. H. Cotton reports Christmas business fully fifty per cent greater than in 1903. Carnations were the best seller, with Lorraine begonias the most popular plant ever shown here.

Bulbous Stock at Geo. A. Kuhl's, Pekin, Ill., Photographed December 18.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade among the wholesale and retail stores between Christmas and New Year's was, generally speaking, good. The consignments were not large and the local demand, coupled with shipping orders, cleaned up stock nearly every day.

New Year's business did not call for much extra stock, which was not as plentiful as at Christmas, and prices were somewhat lower. Transient trade the past week was very quiet, but a great deal of funeral work was made. White stock was more in demand than a week ago. There are plenty of good roses to be had but Liberty and Meteor are scarce. Beauties of the fancy order are very limited but the other grades are more plentiful.

Carnations are having a great call, both white and colored varieties. On Saturday the market sold up clean on everything good. Violets were stickers the past week and the price went down as low as 75 cents per hundred. On Saturday the price doubled again and stock moved satisfactorily. Romans are coming in big lots. Paper Whites are not so plentiful. Lily of the valley is moving slowly. Harrisii and callas are scarce. Green goods are slow this week, although smilax and asparagus have some call.

Various Notes.

It pains me to report the death of our old friend, Patrick Quinn. He was killed near his place on Arlington avenue in an altercation with a teamster. "Pat," as he was better known, was for twenty-five years foreman for the old Jordan Floral Co. He was 42 years old and leaves a wife, three children, two brothers and a host of friends in the trade to mourn his loss. The funeral took place Monday afternoon to Calvary cemetery. Floral designs were numerous and many of the old-timers were present.

Fred Foster has the sympathy of the trade. Death has taken away his only daughter, Edith, 8 years old. The funeral took place December 30, many of his friends in the trade attending.

Henry Emunds, of Belleville, called the past week and reports a fine trade during all of the holiday week, with plenty of his own stock to fill orders for New Year's.

A. Jablonsky, of Wellston, reports a big trade, both local and shipping, in Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and that his plants were never finer.

Michel Plant and Bulb Co. are having a big sale of their surplus stock, also Boston and Pierson ferns. All their stock is of good quality.

C. A. Kuehn says those red folding paper Christmas bells sold out clean, with many more calls for the 6-inch size.

The Ellison Floral Co. had one of the most attractive window displays in the west end during Christmas week, the daily press giving them special notice.

Fred H. Weber, on Boyle and Maryland avenues, says trade was way ahead of last year, especially in plants of all kinds, with Christmas greens in great demand.

Wm. Schray & Sons did a rushing plant trade. Everything sold well. Cut flowers, too, had a great call.

Frank M. Ellis reports a big sale on California violets. Even at the high prices everything sold clean.

Kalisch & Sons report an extra large demand for cut flowers and plants during the holidays.

Oscar Heile and the Diemer Floral Co., who play the parts of rivals on South Broadway, report a good Christmas trade.

Alex. Waldbart, in the extreme west end, had a fine trade in blooming plants and plenty to do with cut flowers.

Max. Rotter, on North Broadway, reports a large cut flower trade during Christmas week, with plenty of funeral work.

George Wagner, on Maryland avenue, is greatly pleased with his season's business.

From what I can learn this early, about twelve will attend the carnation meeting at Chicago. At the Florists' Club meeting next Thursday afternoon the number may be increased to fifteen, perhaps twenty. At this meeting the trustees will announce the list of essays for the new year. President Juengel will be on hand, as he has recovered from his sick spell.

Bowling.

It is understood that the Florists' Bowling Club will call a meeting and invite all the florist bowlers to take part in the weekly bowling as usual for the past twelve years. Those who are rolling in the different city leagues will take part when their season closes, in about four months. Those who are expected to attend this meeting are F. C. Weber, Theo. Miller, C. A. Kuehn, A. Y. Ellison, Carl and Robert Beyer, Ed. Gerlach, Fred Weber, Jr., C. C. Sanders, Fred Meinhardt, Frank Ellis, O. R. Beneke, E. W. Guy, Henry Lorenze and J. J. Beneke.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The Grand Rapids Florists' Association met at the office of Henry Smith, Monroe and Division streets, December 27 to discuss the first month's business of the Chicago agency. The agency was established December 1, several of the local florists uniting in the attempt to secure a Chicago market for their surplus stock. Thus far the plan has proved most satisfactory. The local florists have shipped their surplus stock and have found a ready market for it. Although the business is still in its infancy, it is expected that it will work so satisfactorily in the end that it may be enlarged even to the extent of opening agencies in other cities than Chicago. All the local growers are highly pleased with the experiment, as it prevents a lot of surplus stock spoiling on their hands because of there not being a sufficient demand for this grade in Grand Rapids.

BUTTE, MONT.

A few words in regard to Christmas. The Butte Floral Co. had their greatest Christmas since in business and were completely sold out Sunday morning. The only objection was they could not get enough stock. Luckily they had about 100 azaleas, which were decorated and sold very readily. Their display was grand and many visitors changed their minds about the wild and woolly west. Mr. Wilhelm, in charge here, must be given credit for his windows, also his interior decorations. J. Seitz, at the greenhouse, certainly hustled to get his azaleas in and Robert Miller, the rose grower, cut a fine lot, both carnations and roses. The weather was very cold, with lots of snow and ice, which made it harder for us.

Our best seller was Enchantress, which brought $3 and $4, Beauties brought from $15 to $25, roses from $5 to $8 and the other carnations brought $2, Lawson $2.50 and $3.

WICHITA, KAN.

The Christmas trade was enough better than last year to keep up the record of advancement each year. Holly and greens sold well, holly being short in supply, as the florists could not get their orders filled from the wholesalers. Prices were about the same as last year. Bulb stock had a slow sale, except in assorted boxes. The quality of cut flowers was good in most cases. Blooming plants had a fair sale, but not much call for palms, etc. Azaleas were in the lead with pans of Romans next. Weather conditions were good. Prices on cut flowers, while no higher than heretofore at Christmas, prevented many from buying, but the supply was exhausted and orders declined for lack of stock.

THE REVIEW is the standard adviser today on floriculture.—FRANK BROS., Beardstown, Ill.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Following Christmas, supplies were unusually small until December 31. Growers no doubt were wise in allowing retail buyers to use up their heavy purchases of the preceding week. Trade was quiet for several days, but improved on New Year's eve, when stock cleaned out very nicely. New Year's day is not kept here as in other places and occasions no extra call for flowers, outside of a few dances and similar social functions. The present week will, however, see a real start to social activity. Quite a number of dinner parties of prominent society leaders will help to enliven business.

Prices have dropped all around from Christmas figures, as was to be expected, but as a rule are still satisfactory. Best Beauties have sold at from $60 to $75 and from these figures down to $6 per hundred. Brides and Bridesmaids for select stock have brought $12.50, a few extra fine making $16, poorer grades down to $4. Top price for Liberty has been $25. Carnations have made $4 to $6 for good stock, some extra fine Enchantress going for $7 and $8. Violets are coming in more freely. About $1 is the average for doubles, extra good single making $1.50. A few chrysanthemums still come in. There is no great demand, however, at $6 per hundred. Cut poinsettias of various grades are more plentiful, but are not in much request. Campernelle jonquils at $2 and Trumpet major narcissi at $6 are seen in small lots. Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi are hard to move. Callas and Lilium Harrisii average $12.50 per hundred. Freesias are coming from several growers, also some nice white and yellow marguerites. Prices on "green goods" remain about the same, with no particular increase in demand. The new year opened with phenomenally warm weather. This will tend to increase output of flowers and may reduce prices.

The Lecture Program.

The following is the program of lectures and discussions for the season 1905 at Horticultural Hall, meetings open each Saturday at 11 o'clock. January 14, "Some Recently Introduced Weeds," by Merritt L. Fernald, Cambridge; January 21, "Forest Planting for Profit in Massachusetts," by Theodore F. Borst, Boston; January 28, general discussion on fruit, opened by E. W. Wood, West Newton; February 4, "Finding of an Orchard Survey in Western New York," with stereopticon illustrations, by Prof. John Craig, Ithaca; February 11, "Dwarf Fruit Trees, Their Uses, Propagation and Management," by Prof. F. A. Waugh, Amherst; February 18, "Bacteria as Fertilizers," with stereopticon illustrations, by Dr. Geo. T. Moore, Washington; February 25, general discussion on flowers, opened by J. W. Manning, Reading; March 4, "Some Aspects of Hardy Flower Culture," by A. Herrington, Madison, N. J.; March 11, "The Return to Nature," by Miss Maud Summers, Cambridge; March 18, general discussion on vegetables, to be opened by W. W. Rawson, Arlington.

The comparative dearth of practical floricultural topics in the foregoing list is to be regretted. It would seem to be necessary to add some practical florist or gardener to the lecture committee another year to secure a more interesting program. There is certainly little in the coming course to appeal to florists.

The inaugural meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for the year 1905 will be held on January 7, at Horticultural Hall. The business will consist of hearing an inaugural address from the president-elect, A. F. Estabrook, the reports of officers and the reports of the chairmen of the various committees.

Various Notes.

William Malloy and James Denning, at the Park street market, salesmen for the J. A. Budlong Co., of Providence, R. I., are both on the sick list, the latter being quite seriously ill. Barney McGinty, of the same market, is also suffering from blood poisoning.

W. H. Ward, of Montvale, has been shipping extra good Mont Blanc and Earliest of All sweet peas to the stores for some time, also a high grade of carnations. Mrs. Ward makes a very efficient and gracious saleslady for the same.

Evans, of Watertown, is sending in quantities of his high grade of mignonette to the Park street market. Messrs. Kidder and Spillbury's single violets at the same stand are extra fine.

J. Horrigan, of East Foxboro, is very dangerously ill. He is one of the stall holders at the Park street market.

At the new market, Tailby, of Wellesley, is selling the first sweet scented jonquils. A. H. Fewkes, of Newton Highlands, has fine white and yellow marguerites and Edward Bingham, of Dedham, extra good violets.

Thomas Pigler, who acts as salesman for Oscar L. Dorr, of Sharon Heights, at Park street, has about 3,000 very fine Campbell violets daily. He sold 35,000 of these on December 24. At the same stand Mrs. L. C. Fisk, of Upton, is handling quite a lot of variegated stevia.

F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, was a caller the past week. He had been looking up various new carnations and we understand liked Arnold's Variegated Lawson so well that he purchased the same.

W. E. Doyle reports Christmas sales far ahead of any previous year. Azaleas were the best sellers in plants, those at from $4 to $7 each being favorites. Killarney rose is a great favorite with Mr. Doyle and for so single a variety it is a great keeper. Among other plants and flowers shown at the Boyleston street store the past week were Rose Eglantine, with a delicious sweet brier odor, double prunus, Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora and very fine white lilac.

McMulkin had a very pretty white window this week, roses, carnations, valley, white azaleas, camellias, hyacinths, Lilium Harrisii and other seasonable flowers being tastefully displayed.

A local grower, who had an overflow of white carnations at Christmas, says he will experiment with dyes to see if he can produce scarlet ones another season. He says if all his whites could have been dyed of a Manley or Flamingo hue he would have been many a dollar in pocket.

Alexander Ogg, the grower of the specimen Lorraine begonia, of which a cut appeared in the last issue of the REVIEW, has some 200 similar specimens at Southboro, Mass. His best plants were rooted in September, 1903, and carried over winter in a carnation house. We omitted to mention that at the last club meeting Mr. Ogg also showed flowers of a splendid type of Cypripedium insigne montanum.

While energetic measures are being taken to fight the brown tail and gypsy moths in a number of our nearby towns and cities the coming season, news comes from the state entomologist of Maine that the brown tail has infested large areas in that state, many trees in widely separated sections being loaded with nests.

A Massachusetts subscriber asks us to advise him through the REVIEW how to rid his carnation house of mice, which are eating the buds. There is no better preventive than one or two greenhouse cats. As the trouble is acute we would recommend small quantities of strychnine mixed with cheese or meat. This is the most speedy remedy we have ever tried.

To the increasing number of REVIEW readers in Boston and vicinity, we wish a very happy and prosperous New Year. We would be glad at all times to receive from any of them little items of trade or general horticultural interest. W. N. CRAIG.

MILWAUKEE.

The florists' shops in the down-town districts show the effects of a large holiday trade. The beautiful displays made before Christmas were sadly disarranged and almost completely cleaned up by eager purchasers. The demand for plants has increased considerably and some dealers state it is less difficult to realize a good profit on a well-grown plant than on cut flowers and in many respects it is more satisfactory to the purchaser and recipient. More elaborate displays were made this year than formerly and most of the stores were filled up with a fine selection of the blooming plants seasonable at this holiday. Azaleas, poinsettias and cyclamen predominated, although there was a generous amount of primroses, Jerusalem cherries, Christmas peppers and lily plants.

The cut flower market remained firm, especially in colored stock. The demand for carnations was exceptionally brisk and good Enchantress, Crane, Estelle and Lawson readily brought $8 per hundred and other varieties brought equally good prices according to quality. In roses, Chatenay, Liberty and American Beauty were short of the demand, with enough of Maid, Bride, Perle and Gate to go around. A fine cut of violets of excellent quality was on the market and sold well. There was plenty of stevia, bulbous stock and various greens to meet all demands. Shipping trade was fully up to former years, although high prices have most effect on the smaller dealers, who have a sort of schedule prices the year around.

A noticeable feature was the large displays and consequent large demand for bells, chimes and immortelle wreaths. Mistletoe was plentiful and quality fine. Holly was in good demand and there was a shortage the last few days and prices went upward. C. C. Pollworth Co. had a branch store for the handling of holly and greens for the holidays.

Prices held up well until after New Year's although the warmer weather helped somewhat to increase the supply of stock. INCOG.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Business continued fairly strong between Christmas and New Year's, shipping trade being particularly active, but by Friday receipts had so increased that prices began to weaken. As a matter of fact long Beauties had been steadily retreating ever since Christmas and their capitulation was no surprise. Medium lengths do considerably better, comparatively, than the long stock. Quality is good. Other roses have held up better than Beauties but Chatenay is weak. Brides are doing better than Maids because of the call for funeral work and for the same reason Liberty is less aggressive.

Carnations went out of the old year with prices on the toboggan. The break of Friday was accentuated Saturday and this week the wholesale houses are overstocked, with the buyer making the prices on the lower grades. The good shipping demand still makes a fair market for the select stock.

Receipts of New York violets are not large but prices are low, from 50 cents to $1.50 according to the original character of the goods and the length of time they are finding a buyer. Singles sell at a fair price but Campbell is pretty poor property. Valley is plentiful and the last few days there have been many calla and Harrisii lilies about. There are buckets full of Paper Whites and Romans, a few tulips and daffodils, also some sweet peas, considerable mignonette and a great deal of stevia. Jurgens still has poinsettias. "Green goods" are equal to all requirements.

Hardy Ferns.

The hardy cut fern question has afforded the wholesalers considerable trouble the past few years as it seems that the supply in Massachusetts is inadequate to give the country all the ferns needed at a reasonable price and of fair quality. It has become so that the jobbers there apparently feel that they are doing the big buyers a favor by filling their orders. This has resulted in the use of more or less Michigan ferns and the development of a regular source of supply there. This week parties have been in town offering contracts for million lots of 1905 crop for delivery as wanted up to May 1, 1906. Attractive prices are quoted and the wholesalers are all interested, as a satisfactory supply and near at hand would be greatly appreciated.

A Conundrum.

There is a story told, but not authenticated, for it would appear superfluous, of a dining-table center-piece made by a local florist who shall be nameless save that he was christened by fond parents for the biblical gentleman of the coat of many colors. It was a basket filled with moss, the flowers wired on picks. No corsage bouquets were provided and, on leaving the table, where the center-piece was much admired, one of the guests asked if she might have a flower, and took a rose. It came away none too easily, bringing with it a tuft of moss and skewered on the pick a card, and on the card a name and these words of great significance: "With deepest sympathy." Now, the question is, where did the florist get that moss?

Various Notes.

The Flower Growers' Co. held its annual meeting Tuesday afternoon, re-electing directors as follows: Emil Buettner, F. R. Hills, John Sinner, A. Henderson, W. L. Tonner. The directors elected officers as follows: President, Emil Buettner; vice-president, W. L. Tonner; treasurer, F. R. Hills; recording secretary, A. Henderson; financial secretary and manager, Percy Jones. The officers were congratulated on the showing made the past year. Deustel Bros., of Galewood, are new stand holders.

When one enters the J. A. Budlong greenhouses, the first thing that strikes him, aside from the good condition in which the stock is always found, is the fact that the purlin supports are all set at an angle to the benches, so that they form almost a right angle with the glass. This is a departure from the practice in other big places north of town.

E. G. Hill came up from Richmond Wednesday with a magnificent bunch of his new red rose, which he installed at Benthey's and sent out an invitation to growers to come and see it. Many had already bought and others did so when they saw this vase. Richmond will be largely grown in this vicinity next year and Mr. Hill says it looks as if he would have no trouble at all in selling all the stock he can root.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports that its December business exceeded by $400 the largest previous month in its career. Heretofore Easter has been each year's largest month.

Harry Rowe has received word that two orders of a dozen each of long Beauties shipped to San Francisco as Christmas gifts arrived in good shape.

L. Coatsworth made a trip to New Castle last week and thence to Richmond in search of coal, five of his cars having failed to arrive. While at Richmond he inspected Hill's new rose, of which he expects to plant a house.

Nic Miller, well known as a grower north of town, rented his greenhouses last fall and is now with John Evans, of the Quaker City Machine Co., at Richmond, Ind.

E. E. Pieser has been ill for several days with tonsilitis.

Flint Kennicott was in a wreck on the Illinois Central suburban line Tuesday morning and got a first-class shaking up.

Peter Reinberg is getting a big cut of Uncle John with very fine color.

John Cook, who has recently been employed by Grand Rapids growers, has been sent over by the association to assist in the selling at the market, where they are now getting in considerable stock.

F. C. Struvy expects to leave soon to spend the balance of the winter in California.

John Euithle, a greenhouse hand employed at Sixty-eighth street near the Rock Island tracks, was struck by a train there December 29 and very seriously injured.

C. S. Stewart reports that he is doing a very nice trade at his stand on Ogden avenue.

The Record-Herald for December 25 gave the front page of one section to an illustrated write-up of "Chicago the Flower Market of America." While it was not all true and not all well-advised, as, for instance, the part about high prices, it was well written and readable and a great advertisement for the trade.

R. R. McGill, of W. W. Barnard & Co., spent the Christmas holidays at his old home at Ainsworth, Ia.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Since our last notes much has transpired in and around Toronto, as two very busy weeks have passed. As city florists look back to them they consider it the best Christmas Toronto has ever seen. Of course it would be impossible for the splendid business that was done to pass off without some little regrets. These came in the shape of a number of frozen boxes of flowers, plants, etc., that were delivered Saturday afternoon, as it turned bitterly cold, with a keen northwest wind. The worst case we had reported was where the driver, as well as a load of plants, was frozen. The driver was taken to the hospital where he has been ever since.

Since Christmas business has been quiet and with our municipal and other elections, some prophesy that trade will not be up to the mark during the month of January; however, these people we usually find looking for trouble.

Notable features of the Christmas business were the extra demand for plants, both foliage and blooming, and the amount of bells, hampers and other accessories that were used, and the splendid prices realized by the retail dealers for good stock. As an explanation of these features it might be noted that Toronto has always been notably a cut flower city and plants never sold on a par with cut flowers, especially at holiday time. The retailers especially comment upon their big sales of plants and the exceptionally good price they received for them. Bells sold fairly well last year and it was thought this year that demand would not be so great but the sales this year far surpassed other years. Good roses, with the exception of American Beauties, were on the scarce side, violets plentiful, Paper Whites and Romans an over-stock; greens of all kinds in full supply.

Prices went down on January 2 and will range about the same as other years. We expect in a couple of weeks to be settled down to steady business. D. J.

HERE IS A MONEY-MAKER

New Late Pink Chrysanthemum, Freeda Senner. This Chrysanthemum we have grown three years. It is a very profitable variety on account of it being so very late; begins blooming December 20, continuing to middle of January; color, salmon pink; large and full; strong grower, three to four feet, foliage dark green leaves, well up to bloom, and a good keeper. On account of its lateness, it is bound to be exceedingly valuable.

We will book orders for March delivery, strong rooted cuttings, 10c; $9.00 per 100.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

In spite of a severe storm of snow and wind that visited this city last week, a splendid New Year's business was done Owing to the cold, cloudy weather and severe cutting, roses were not up to the usual standard, but carnations are looking well and the demand equals the supply. Prices are still the same as a week ago and the indications are that there will be little weakening for some time to come. There is a plentiful supply of Paper Whites, lily of the valley and Romans, but the demand is light, except for funeral work. Everyone with whom I have talked seems well satisfied with the amount of business done the past two weeks and confident of fair business to come.

Various Notes.

A number of large receptions were reported the past week, notable among which was the consecration of Bishop Lillis at the cathedral and the reception following at the Coates Hotel. Ed. Ellsworth, with G. M. Kellogg, had both decorations and furnished a beautiful display, using about 400 American Beauties in the work.

Another was that for the Progress Club's New Year's reception and ball. Palms, smilax and roses were used and the electrical display was unusually fine and reflects credit upon the decorator, Jas. Biggam.

The Alpha Floral Co. had charge of a very nice decoration on Central street, which, although small, was very fine. The Alpha Floral Co. reports an exceedingly good business the past week.

J. H. Vesey, out on Denver avenue, reports good business the past week. He has some fine stuff coming on.

Miss H. B. Jewell reports fine business during the week and is contemplating building several houses for growing a general collection of cut flowers and bedding plants.

Mrs. C. J. Duss reports business in her line as satisfactory and is booking advance orders. Mrs. Duss is enlarging

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

SOME dissatisfaction is expressed at the poor deliveries that are being made on beans.

CUCUMBER seed and sweet corn are listed in this year's catalogues at the old-time prices.

THE wholesale lists will contain higher prices on many things in seeds than do the retail books.

BURPEE'S twenty-ninth general seed catalogue was put into the mails on the last day of the old year.

IT is reported that the California growers have concluded to quit operating in the "up the river" region.

THE catalogues that cater to the "price buyer" surely get down to rock bottom on many of the standard sorts.

ALL varieties of seed beans are higher in price than they have been for many seasons at this time of the year.

IT seems rather odd that a wholesale inquiry for quotations on ten bushel lots of beans are priced higher than a gardener's inquiry for one bushel.

WHETHER there is enough egg plant seed for market garden trade is still a question. Grades below the gardeners' standard are not plentiful, either.

J. W. RATEKIN, of Shenandoah, Ia., reports a very good quality of seen corn in drying houses there. His own firm is one of the largest handlers in the country.

CONTRACT deliveries of peas that most of the growers are making seem to be satisfactory. Some sorts are quite scarce, but not sufficiently so to cause any disturbance.

THERE will be a meeting on January 10, at Cincinnati, of the executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association. Routine matters will afford the principal business.

THE winter so far has been favorable for the onion sets that are in storage. February shipments are about the first to come out. The true condition of the sets will then be known.

SOME of the most important of the foreign seeds are behindhand again this year. Replies to inquiries as to the cause of delay put the blame on the weather at harvest time and the unfavorable conditions since.

VISITED CHICAGO:—W. J. Fosgate, Santa Clara, Cal.; Chas P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal.; J. S. Michael, representing Sioux City Nursery and Seed Co., Sioux City, Ia.; E. F. Ball, of E. J. Bowen Co., San Francisco, Cal.

THERE is not so much trouble in getting foreign imports of seeds through the custom house this season. The invoice prices seem to satisfy the appraisers better than they did last year. This is helpful to the importer, as it saves unnecessary delay.

SEED TRADE IN THE SOUTH.

G. B. McVay, president of the Amzi Godden Co., Birmingham, Ala., is quoted as follows:

The past year's business was only an average one, due in a large measure to the excessive dry fall. The market gardeners of the South suffered much from losing their fall crops on this account.

The prospects for another year are much better than last season at the same time. We have a much larger number of orders booked than heretofore to be shipped out in the next ten days; in fact our warehouse is a very busy place, where orders are being executed.

The activity among the Mississippi truckers would indicate a very much increased acreage to vegetable crops the coming season.

The same conditions seem to obtain throughout the South. The prospects for cheap cotton is forcing the southern farmer to diversify in his farm operations. Taking the situation from our point of business it would seem that the year 1905 is to be the banner year for profitable business.

PEWAUKEE, WIS.—Frank Scholl received a nine and one-half pound boy as a Christmas present.

LYONS, KAN.—Mrs. H. B. Smith says the Christmas trade was good considering the high prices asked for cut flowers at wholesale and which are a decided deterrent to increased trade in the small places.

SEDALIA, MO.—Gelven & Son are receiving material for four new carnation houses and for a fireproof boiler house. They report a good holiday trade, but no better than usual. Carnations were in great demand but blooming plants would not sell.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

JOHNSON BROS., Snowflake, Wis., are gathering and shipping native tree seeds, principally pines.

THOS. MEEHAN & SONS, Dreshertown, Pa., report that the demand for Manetti stocks has been so great that their importation was quickly exhausted.

FOR the presidency of the Kansas State Horticultural Society, Frank Holsinger, of Wyandotte, defeated E. J. Holman, of Leavenworth, by eleven votes. W. H. Barnes was re-elected secretary.

S. W. MARSHALL & Son, the nurserymen of Fresno, say that the apple groves in the foothill and coast region of California fully sustain the reputations of the best eastern varieties. Apple growing is on the increase on the coast.

THE Arkansas State Horticultural Society holds its twenty-fifth annual convention at Rogers January 24 to 26. The state has sprung into a leading position for fruit production. Ernest Walwer, Fayettevlle, Ark., is secretary of the society.

IN the selection of a collection of shrubs it is generally the case that too much attention is given to the blossoming of varieties and consequently many species of indubitable worth are left out. There are many traits of shrubs to look to besides the flowers, but chiefly the harmony of foliage, the autumnal effects and, last, but by no means least, says John W. Duncan, the beautiful effects from the many colors of fruits.

CALIFORNIA PRIVET.

I would like to hear through the REVIEW the best way to raise California privet. Have a nice hedge of it and would like to extend it farther.

J. P. E.

The easiest method of propagation for California privet, and that most generally practiced, is to take cuttings eight to twelve inches long in late fall, say November, of year-old-wood. These should be tied in small bunches and buried in the ground over winter. In spring, plant in rows quite thickly and wide enough apart in the rows to permit of frequent cultivation. If bushy plants are desired, pinch the tops from all strong shoots once or twice during the growing season. After the first season's growth is completed the plants are in danger of being killed by severe frost. It would be better to dig them up and heel in the soil quite deeply, replanting in April and at the same time cutting back the plants quite hard. This will insure nice, bushy specimens.

Cuttings as short as four inches can be used if necessary. Be sure the ground is firmly tramped about them also when the rooted plants are transplanted. The best time to plant California privet is April or the early part of May. Fall planting cannot be recommended.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a No. 16 Hitchings corrugated fire box boiler heating a dwelling with 250 feet of radiation and a lean-to greenhouse 9x28 in which there are three lines of 1½-inch pipe. The flow pipes are covered from the boiler to the coils. How much more glass will this boiler carry safely to 60 degrees? W. F. S.

The No. 16 Hitchings boiler is rated to carry 1,000 feet of 4-inch pipe, which is equivalent to 1,100 feet of radiation. If you now have 250 feet of radiation in your house and 120 feet in the greenhouse 9x28, which is about what it requires, your boiler is now carrying 370 feet and its capacity is about 1,100 feet. In other words, you have a working capacity of about 700 feet of radiation not now in use. This will heat a greenhouse with about 3,000 feet of wall and roof space exposed. A house eighteen feet wide and seventy feet long, with side walls four feet high would approximate this exposure.

ST. PAUL.

Christmas trade was good. Everything was in demand, from a sprig of mistletoe to a long-stemmed Beauty. Holly sold unusually well, the supply being exhausted early. Lycopodium wreaths and wreathing sold well but were not in as great demand as in the past. The attitude of some insurance companies in refusing to insure stock where this decorative is used has no doubt caused a decrease in sales. Mistletoe of excellent quality was abundant.

In the plant line dwarf poinsettias in pans easily captured first honors. Well grown red peppers sold well also. Simon Mardner azaleas were in good demand. Palms and ferns met with quick sales but smaller flowering plants did not find buyers readily. Good Lorraine begonias sold fairly well but as the blooms drop quickly after a few hours in the heat they are not very satisfactory Christmas plants. Hampers, wreaths, etc., were liberally supplied with ribbon. Some light colored hampers from Philadelphia were the most unique ever seen in this market.

The supply of cut flowers was about equal to the demand. The home growers all had good crops and realized handsome prices for same. May & Co. had some extra choice Chatenay roses which sold quickly at $5 per dozen. There was a good call for Beauties at $8 to $18 per dozen. Carnations were somewhat short of the demand, with prices well maintained. Flamingo is a most handsome variety for Christmas. Enchantress retailed as high as $3 per dozen.

New Year's trade was good, violets and Beauties being the most popular of any.

Wm. Speth, employed by May & Co. the past year, has moved to New York.

PINE BLUFF, ARK.—Two days before Christmas a heavy fall of rain made the streets almost impassable, but on Saturday morning it was clear and warm. The streets were crowded until late at night. Business was good but buying late. Carnations had the lead, with narcissi a close second. Prices were better than ever before, about twenty per cent increase. Some carnations showed evidence of the pickling process. On Christmas night it began to rain and has been steady for sixteen hours and no outlook for it to stop. Trade has been above the average all the season and A. A. Harper says the outlook for business is good.

Christmas trade was the best in years. Everything in the way of flowering plants cleaned out and a much better grade sold than in any previous year. Plants in the strongest demand were Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, azaleas and poinsettias. Of all these more could have been disposed of. Primulas and cyclamens also sold quite well. There was a moderate call for palms and other foliage plants, but flowering stuff had the principal call.

In cut flowers carnations were once more the favorites. Popular prices were 75 cents to $1 per dozen. The supply was much below the demand. Only a few good chrysanthemums, such as Merry Christmas, were in evidence. For some reason violets were not called for so much as in previous years. Roses, lily of the valley and Roman hyacinths sold quite well, but carnations far outclassed all others in popularity.

Willard & Williams, of the Taunton Greenhouses, had by far the best Christmas trade in their experience and sold more expensive plants and a higher grade of cut flowers than in preceding years. They were pretty well cleaned out of everything salable.

Oscar Kristenson has a very fine show of Lorraine begonias in one of his greenhouses at present. W. N. C.

ELKHART, IND.—W. H. Troyer, who has been growing lettuce, has decided to abandon this crop and put all of his 15,000 feet of glass into cut flowers for next season.

The Market.

Christmas has come and gone and we still have delightful weather. Business was very quiet until about Thursday of Christmas week when all of a sudden it took a tremendous bound and, as I write, I think it is safe to say we have had the most satisfactory trade that has visited this part of the world for many years. Not that flowers brought fancy prices, for as a matter of fact they did not, but owing to the heavy steady demand on Thursday, Friday and Saturday the stores had no difficulty in selling everything they could get hold of at very fair prices. The supply was almost without limit and the demand was out of all proportion to that we have experienced during the last few years and as a consequence I think everyone is well satisfied. Green stuff of all kinds was handled by the wagon load and the fact that this class of stock was within the reach of everyone seemed to be decidedly in its favor and thousands of dollars worth changed hands on very short notice.

The prices obtained by the growers were fully twenty-five per cent lower than those of the past few years but the increased demand and the large quantities that were cut on account of the mildness of the weather more than made up the difference. There was some shortage of roses and fancy stock was not quite plentiful enough, but with carnations, valley, poinsettias, violets and bulbous stock we had an abundance and everything sold.

Various Notes.

The Holland Nursery Co., of Elmhurst, had a very large cut of valley during Christmas week and disposed of it all at good prices.

D. R. Lenox, of Los Angeles, is loading a car of ornamental stock from the Pacific Nurseries at Millbrae.

James Skinner, of Portland, Ore., disposed of four carloads of Oregon fir Christmas trees to the local dealers.

A. Mann, Jr., the Polk street florist, has made a specialty this season of Los Angeles poinsettias and handled over 25,000 of the cut blooms.

J. R. Gould, of Fruitvale, had an extra fine cut of Enchantress and Roosevelt carnations for Christmas. G.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Christmas Trade.

Early in the week the public was out in full force merely to shop and there was some speculation as to how the week would terminate, but Thursday, Friday and Saturday there was a regular stampede and by six o'clock Saturday night everybody had sold out clean.

We cannot say that there was any great increase over last year. On some lines of goods the profits were larger and there is general satisfaction. The storemen made lavish display of choice flowers and the latest novelties introduced by the leading supply houses of the east. The window attractions were right up-to-date and the talk of the town. Red bells were again much in evidence and proved as strong a feature and sold even better than they did a year ago. The supply of cut flowers was about equal to the demand, with the exception of carnations, which are the most popular flowers here, and we were obliged to boost the price on the staple articles in order to more equalize the sales on the other stock. Everything cut locally was clean and well done and a credit to the growers, as nowhere in the country are the elements more trying than around Portland. A few hundred finely grown chrysanthemums seen at one of the leading stores created much favorable comment and sold from $5 to $8 per dozen.

The poinsettia is a good seller here, largely due to its color, and it is not to be wondered at when we have a green climate the year around. Something bright was wanted. We are always obliged to import heavy shipments from California and the quality of stock was up to that of former years.

Roses retailed from $2 to $3 per dozen and carnations from $1.50 to $4 per dozen. Violets were handled in immense quantities and went at 75 cents per bunch. On bulbous stuff ordinary prices prevailed. There was the usual variety of potted plants. Begonia Lorraine, azaleas, cyclamens and primroses all dressed up in the latest Christmas apparel brought most satisfactory prices and there was none left unsold. It was very noticeable that a well flowered plant created as much admiration as did a vase of fine carnations.

About the same amount of "green goods" was sold as in past years. Mistletoe from southern Oregon arrived in perfect condition, but holly was inferior. Loose sprays sold for $1 per yard and wreaths at $1.50 each. Oregon grape, Berberis aquifolium, which grows so plentifully only a few miles from town, is as extensively used here for decorative purposes as ground pine is in the east. Oregon grape is merely a local name for this most useful and beautiful foliage and the Commercial Club shipped fifty boxes to noted men in the east, including President Roosevelt and his cabinet. H. J. M.

CHRISTMAS GREENS.

It is surprising the tremendous trade that has sprung up during the past few years in the gathering and selling of native greens, ferns and berries. It is only within the past five or six years that the demand has been developed to such an extent that it now becomes necessary to travel farther and farther into the woods to be able to get these articles in sufficient quantity to make their gathering profitable.

The native wild huckleberry stems are the most in demand, being that they are in season throughout the entire year.

They are gathered in the wooded sections of the counties north of San Francisco where there is considerable more moisture than they have in that neighborhood. Owing to the ruthless manner in which this valuable green has been gathered by the Italians, who handle this portion of the trade almost exclusively, it will be only a few years until it will be hard to secure.

The California red berry is next on the list in importance and the berries are gathered from the middle of November until the end of January. They cost the florists on an average of $50 per ton and it is safe to say there were upwards of 500 tons sold in San Francisco during Christmas week. Each succeeding year finds them only plentiful in the more remote localities.

We have several varieties of native ferns that are of considerable value and now that the rainy season is here they will be very abundant until the end of spring. The woodwardias and adiantums are the most desirable and many thousands of bunches are disposed of daily in the various flower stores. The common fango, or marsh grass, is plentiful on most of our swampy lands and is quite valuable as an article of decoration. It is cut in bundles each containing about 500 stems and costs the retailers about $3 per dozen bunches.

Berried holly is scarce in California.

The best comes from British Columbia and costs the florists $16.50 per barrel of twenty-five pounds. We imported considerable native holly from Chicago and various eastern points. It cost originally $4 per case but the express charges to San Francisco averaged $8 per case, which makes it rather expensive to handle. Oregon grape root is a valuable article at this season of the year. It grows plentifully in Oregon and northern California and colors up brightly with the advent of frosty weather. When cut, it usually takes the plants about three years to grow enough so that they can be gathered again.

Mistletoe was very abundant and of good quality this season. It cost the retailers about 25 cents per pound, packed in barrels, each containing about twenty to twenty-five pounds.

The demand for wild greens of various kinds is yearly becoming greater and retailers, who a few years ago characterized such material as rubbish, now give considerable space on their shelves and in their window displays to the varieties I have described. G.

WASHINGTON, PA.—J. S. Salmons, of the Washington Floral Co., says holiday trade was a fourth greater than in 1903. Carnations were the best selling cut flowers, azaleas and begonias the most popular plants.

SCRANTON, PA.—The florists in Scranton were very busy through the holidays and had a very fine display of plants and cut flowers and red paper bells, which were very effective, especially the firm of G. R. Clark & Co., of Washington avenue. Wm. Clark also had a new fancy cut flower wagon on the street, which goes to show that things are looking up with this enterprising firm.

RED SPORT (Of Maceo.)

This new "Bread and Butter" commercial brilliant "Crane" Red Carnation, now in its fourth year, has the hardy constitution of General Maceo, with a stronger heavier growth, longer and stiffer stem and a larger flower. Growing under the same conditions and in the same house with Flamingo and Estelle it has produced four times as many blooms as the former and twice as many blooms as the latter. The color is as good as Estelle and the bloom brings as much as does Estelle at its best. Every flower is of a uniform brilliant red, perfectly double with an ideal calyx, in fact we never saw a split one.

Red Sport is perfectly healthy, an easy variety to grow, an early and continuous bloomer, throwing its heaviest cuts around the Christmas holidays and during the Winter months when red is in demand. Red Sport will keep longer and travel farther than any other red carnation, and will prove a bonanza to the grower who does a shipping business. If the scarcity of reds in the market that now exists continues Red Sport will pay better to the square foot of bench than any other variety of any color to date. Every florist who has seen Red Sport growing has placed an order for rooted cuttings, which tells the tale. All our stock is sold up to January 25th. Orders filled in strict rotation from that date on. Price, 12 for $1.50, 25 for $2.50, 50 for $4.00 all post paid. $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000, by express. We guarantee all cuttings to be well rooted and to arrive in good condition.

OMAHA.

Weather conditions prior to Christmas were ideal, plenty of sunshine and warm. Trade prospects were fine, with every hope for a very fine business. Conditions were such that people could get out on the street without inconvenience and this naturally brought buyers that ordinarily would not reach the flower shop.

Stock was not overplentiful, probably because of the unusual demand. Carnations were in their prime, with excellent color. Beauties, while not as plentiful as a year ago, brought better prices. Miscellaneous stock was abundant and brought fair prices. The price of cut flowers inclined to stiffen and held all along the line and averaged higher than for several years. This applies principally to carnations for which there was an unprecedented demand.

Plants were in great demand. Everything in pots went. Some stores did well on palms and ferns and a store in the next square sold few of them, but many of plants in bloom. Begonia Gloire de Lorraine held first place. Those who handled them did well and cleared their stores of them early, necessitating a fresh stock. Azaleas were inclined to be backward in blooming and not nearly as many could be brought in as usual. But this was made up for by selling something else.

The writer has reason to believe that everybody is well satisfied. One storeman says his business is thirty per cent better than a year ago, another twenty-five per cent better, and so all along.

SWEET PEAS.

Can some brother florist tell us something about Earliest of All sweet pea? We have never grown it before and planted it quite heavily this fall. Some of the vines are six feet high and are coming into bloom, but the trouble is the stems are only three to four inches long. Would they do better if we feed them or will they come better later on? We thought of sowing seed of Blanche Ferry among the vines, so that if the Earliest of All did not improve we could cut them out and have the Blanche Ferry to take their place. Can it be done that way? The temperature is 48 to 50 degrees at night, 60 to 65 degrees in the day time. A. B. C.

This is the chief trouble with this pea and it rarely, even under the best conditions, reaches more than six inches in stem. However, after the first blooms are cut the later blooms reach out a little more. Feeding liquid is essential to good quality in bloom and will likely also help the stems. I have had best success by raising the temperature to 54 degrees at night after the buds begin to appear.

It is not good policy to sow Blanche Ferry among the older crop. Sow them in small pots and transplant when ready after preparing the bench or border, and success is assured. R.

SOILS.

I send five samples of soil. Please tell me through the REVIEW what you think of each for growing roses and carnations. Samples Nos. 1 and 5 are from beds of Bride, one sample from where the plants all took sick and died, the other from where they are doing better, but are rather weak in growth and stem. Sample No. 2 is from a Beauty bed. I also grow carnations in the same soil, but use less manure. Samples Nos. 4 and 5 are from pasture lands in the outskirts of the city where I can get soil from greenhouses by buying the land at the rate of $500 per acre. S. S. B.

Sample No. 1 is a very poor soil and unsuited for either roses or carnations. Sample No. 2 is also poor. Sample No. 3 is a real good soil for either purpose and if composted properly, and about one-fifth of decomposed cow manure added, is capable of producing high grade stock. No. 4 is also a good soil, though not nearly so good as No. 3. No. 5 is a very poor soil and not worthy of being used for any greenhouse purpose except possibly to make walks with. I am satisfied that if you use No. 3 and handle your stock skillfully you will have no reason to complain of weak growth. R.

DUNNVILLE, ONT.

Christmas trade in this locality was away above the average especially in the line of cut flowers. While the dull weather made the cut of carnations a little light, yet prices were good and all sold out clean. Roses were of extra fine quality and sold well. Potted plants were not in as large a demand as last season, but cut flowers were ahead. It is safe to say this Christmas was 100 per cent ahead of 1903.

L. H. Weaver, has just finished putting down a gas well and has a very fair flow, plenty to heat about 15,000 square feet of glass.

PIPE FOR RADIATION.

Please tell us the best kind of pipe for use in heating greenhouses, galvanized or black pipe. H. A. F.

Galvanized pipe is seldom if ever used for heating purposes. It is more expensive than black pipe, which is a point in favor of black pipe. In addition to this the coating of tin and lead used in galvanizing the pipe acts the same as a coat of paint or as any other covering to cut down the heating power of the pipe. The black pipe will give off more heat per unit of area than will the galvanized pipe, and for that reason, if for no other, its use would be preferable. L. C. C.

What a Few Say, All That Use It Say.

Kansas City, Mo.
I have used The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder now for two years and I find it the best and cheapest article on the market to kill Thrips and Green Fly. I would not be without it.
A. F. BARBE.

New London, Conn.—No, all flower growers are not liars. Your Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder fills the bill. Clean, quick and efficacious. No dirty tobacco stems to litter up the paths and taint the carnation flowers with an offensive odor that never leaves them.
E. W. CLARK.

New Castle, Pa.—Duplicating so often the past two years our order for The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder is a sure indication that it has no equal in our estimation. As an effective insecticide it does the work well.
BUTZ BROS.

Richmond, Ind.
We have found your Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder excellent. Very effective in its work.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade has been somewhat quiet since Christmas, excepting a few large decorations, until Saturday when we had an unusually good New Year's business, not large orders, but evidently just enough prosperity to allow almost everyone to have a few flowers on his table for New Year's. The weather was exceptionally fine Saturday, being almost like a spring day which allowed everyone to get out and this probably accounted for the extra trade. Few of the stores had made preparations for the extra run but they got all the stock they wanted, as we now have three wholesalers and it is always possible to raise something among them.

Various Notes.

The new conservatories donated to the western penitentiary were opened last Saturday. After marching the 900 prisoners through them they returned to the chapel where there were about fifty visitors, including Wm. Falconer. The prisoners take great interest in the conservatories and are pleased and thankful to the donor, Henry Phipps, for helping them to some of the good and beautiful things of the outside world.

Wm. Cromack, of Irwin, will move his greenhouses from their present location one mile east and add two new ones.

J. W. Elliott, president of the Elliott Nursery Co., has purchased and moved into a new home in Sewickley.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, register: Beatrice; this might be called a light pink Dorothy except that the blooms come much larger; habit of growth, length of stem and form of flower resemble that variety closely; the color is a beautiful shade of Daybreak pink, a full shade lighter than that variety; strong growth and never bursts. Flambeau, large round blooms on strong stems; strong growth and free bloomer; stands hot weather best of any scarlet we have ever grown; color a shade deeper than Crane.

Parties having new carnations should submit the name intended for use to the Carnation Society before having it printed in any shape, so as to avoid duplication as far as practical.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

Plans for entertaining the members of the Carnation Society at Chicago January 25 and 26, are well under way. P. J. Hauswirth has kindly consented to act as exhibition manager. The exhibition should eclipse all previous ones of the American Carnation Society.

Chicago had the convention seven years ago, but since that time that city has increased its plantings of carnations to over a million plants, so that our first exhibition is really a baby in comparison to the coming one. Joliet did not grow a carnation at that time; neither did Bassett & Washburn, Peter Reinberg or Weiland & Risch, all of whom are now large exhibitors. Joliet alone sent 7,000 blooms to last year's show at Detroit. I estimate the number of blooms that will be staged at Chicago at 20,000, a sight that will be well worth coming a long way to see. In fact, no grower of carnations can afford to stay away. Everyone, big or little, will find it a very profitable trip. One can see for himself all the new varieties, take notes and decide which ones he wants to grow for his own particular trade.

No doubt there will be many new exhibitors who will be warmly welcomed into the fold. If you have some of the standard varieties in good shape, bring them along and compare them with the best in the land. If you have a flower or a few flowers of a seedling or a sport, bring them along also, even though you have not enough to enter in a class; you can get the opinion of the best growers as to their value.

Are you a member of the society? If not you should be; $2 sent to the secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., will do the business. A small item, surely, for the benefits received. Don't put it off but send your name and address with $2 enclosed at once.

The exhibition takes place in the large banquet hall of the Auditorium, Chicago. An ideal place, overlooking Lake Michigan. The banquet will be held in the same building. You can also secure rooms there; therefore, if the weather should be inclement, it will not be necessary to go outside for anything during the two days.

Many visitors will want to stay a day or two longer to see the larger establishments they have read about or seen pictures of. That you will receive a cordial welcome from all and be well taken care of is a foregone conclusion.

ORIGINATOR. INCORPORATED.

That It is the Best Red Forcing Variety yet Produced.

1st. It is of strong and rapid growth, more vigorous than any other forcing variety in commerce.
2nd. It comes to perfection without special care or culture and can be grown in the same soil and temperature and with the same treatment given to Bride and Maid.
3rd. It ships perfectly, as it can be cut very tight and develops as well off as on the bush.
4th. Has very near the same tone of color as Liberty, with more scarlet and does not blue with age.
5th. This variety is nearly a pure tea, being seeded from LADY BATTERSEA, fertilized by LIBERTY, and as a result has shown no tendency toward going dormant in mid-winter, at which time the variety is at its very best.
6th. Produces freely throughout the year, long pointed buds on tall straight stems with elegant dark foliage.
7th. Is as easy to root, and grafts as readily as Bride or Maid.
8th. Has as delicious a fragrance as American Beauty.

Was awarded the silver cup at the World's Fair for best seedling rose and a special silver cup at Chicago for best seedling. Prices, own root—100 plants for $30; 250 for $70; 1000 for $250. 500 at 1000 rate.

ROSALIND ORR ENGLISH

OUR PINK SEEDLING from Mme. Chatenay is unapproached in color; the bud is pointed, quite full, borne on long slender stems, beautifully set with foliage, free in growth and bloom; the flower is very beautiful from its earliest bud form till fully expanded. Was awarded certificate of merit at the Chicago Show; $25 00 per 100, $200 per 1000. Both these Varieties are easy to propagate and easy to grow. Come and see them at home.

CARNATIONS

The best big-flowered, general-purpose Scarlet Carnation now before the trade is CARDINAL, color superb, texture perfect, in vigorous health and of splendid habit. Also FIANCEE and F. BURKI. All three at $12.00 per hundred, $100 per thousand.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

Among the new varieties which we had on trial for this year are some magnificent sorts, nine of which have been awarded certificates, viz.: Clementine Touset, the big early white Chadwick, October 8; Dr. Galloway, mid-season incurving white; Mlle. Jeannie Nonin, very late white, winner of the Sweepstakes and Silver Cup at Chicago as best New Mum of the year. These three sorts are marvelously fine commercial varieties in pure white, NONIN probably ranking as the finest Mum extant, regardless of date of blooming. Besides these are: Reveil de Begles, early commercial yellow; Roi d' Italie, early commercial yellow; Anna Debono, Mme. E. Lemoine, Prefet Boncourt, Souv. d' Calvat Pere, four grand exhibition whites. Besides these we have: The Wells-Pockett Set for 1905; The Australians of the year; The Marquis of Pins Set, M Calvat's Fine Sorts, the best of Nonin's, Bruant's and Rozain's.

All at 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100, except Mrs. Wm. Duckham, which is 75c each; $7.50 per doz.; $50.00 per 100

We Desire to Announce

TO THE TRADE THAT THIS SEASON WE WILL DISSEMINATE

THREE OF OUR SEEDLING CARNATIONS

INDIANA MARKET.

A seedling from Flora Hill and White Cloud. We have been growing this variety the past four years, and now it is our main cut flower white. The blooms are nicely rounded and deeply serrated, which gives it a beautiful, feathery appearance when in a bunch. As good in hot weather as F. Hill, and a fine winter bloomer, retaining its round form throughout the season and does not burst. An all the year round white. Blooms fine in the field in summer. A splendid keeper and pure white. Size 2½ to 3 inches.

FLAMBEAU.

Flora Hill x Jubilee. No scarlet up to date stands hot weather like this variety, owing to its F. Hill blood. A good, strong grower and steady bloomer. Color a shade lighter than Jubilee. Round form and slightly serrated, and a fine keeper. A strictly commercial scarlet of great promise.

BEATRICE.

Easily the freest blooming and most profitable light pink carnation we have ever grown. Comes into bloom early and continues steady throughout the season. Might be called a light pink Dorothy except that the bloom comes considerably larger. The growth stem and form of the bloom resemble that variety, while the color is a beautiful shade of light pink, a full shade brighter than Daybreak, and holds its color splendidly. Visitors at our place are at once attracted by its beautiful color. Not a giant exhibition sort, but a steady bread and butter variety. A fine keeper and never bursts. Also a splendid summer bloomer.

Both this season and last, these varieties have been our main varieties for cut blooms in their respective colors, and they have sold up clean when others had to be sacrificed. All three were awarded Certificates of Merit on November 15, 1904, by the State Society of Indiana Florists. We are booking orders for February delivery. January delivery all sold. Get your order in at once.

$10.00 per 100; $80.00 per 1000. Will send you 100 of each of these three for $24.00.

We also have a fine stock of Indianapolis, Lady Bountiful, The Belle, Moonlight, The Bride, Vesper, Flamingo, Crusader, Daheim Marion Beauty and New Daybreak, at $5.00 per 100; $45.00 per 1000.

Also Lorna, Queen Louise, Her Majesty, Innocence, Flora Hill, Mrs. Thos. Lawson, Floriana, Ethel Crocker, Enchantress, G. H. Crane, and Harlowarden.

THE HISTORY AND CULTURE OF

COPYRIGHT, 1904, BY FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Cultural Methods.

Presuming that I may have inspired in some at least a desire to make a trial of grafted roses, I will take up the details of making the grafts and the subsequent handling of the plants. The process of making the grafts will be given in considerable detail, as it is the basis for success, the after care of the grafted and own-root plants differing in but few particulars. To begin at the beginning:

Procuring the Stocks.

As the best stocks at present come from Britain, I should advise giving an order to some reliable nurseryman. This should be done during the summer preceding the fall when the stocks are to be delivered. The next thing to do is to keep posted on the exact date of the shipment and arrival of the same, and if one cannot be around personally to see that they are rushed through the custom house, this important work should be intrusted to a broker in whom one may have confidence, with instructions to see that the shipment is delivered as quickly as possible after arrival. I have no doubt but that many thousands of stocks have been ruined beyond recovery by being left lying carelessly around warehouses in boxes with covers off, exposed to drying winds, thus allowing them to shrivel up long before they reach the grower. In the cases of small growers living in the same section, it would seem to be advisable to club together and have their separate orders sent as one large shipment. This would undoubtedly cheapen the cost of shipment as well as facilitate the delivery of the goods.

It must not be understood, however, that early lifted stocks, as a rule, are recommended, for nothing will give the grower more trouble than a lot of green Manetti that have been shipped before they were thoroughly ripened. They will almost certainly shrivel up and no amount of care that is bestowed on them will be able to prevent this. Generally speaking, it will be after the middle of December before first-class Manetti can reach this country from Britain.

Heel in at Once.

On the arrival of the stocks, if they have been properly packed, the bundles will be slightly moist and the stocks should appear fresh and plump. Now right here is the very place where many beginners have made great failures, and straightway blamed their dealers for sending poor stuff. There may be, and undoubtedly are, many excellent ways of handling Manetti at this particular stage, but the one I mention has given very satisfactory results and beginners would do well to follow it. All packing or covering should be removed from the bundles and the stocks immediately plunged in trenches in soil to two-thirds of their depth and given a thorough watering, taking care to wash the soil well in about the roots. It is not necessary to plunge the stocks separately; they will do just as well in bundles, if all covering is taken off.

Bundle of Manetti Stocks as Received from Europe.

Potting Up.

In from four or five days to a week they will be ready for potting, but if they are kept cool, and about 40 degrees is right, there need be no hurry about the matter as they ought to keep in this condition for at least a month; and if two or three batches are potted each week they will come along in about the right quantity for grafting.

If the stocks are allowed to remain in the trenches until they have just started to make white rootlets they will generally take root more quickly when potted. Two and one-half inch pots are the proper size to use and, indeed, if the stocks are properly rooted this size will be found quite small enough, for it must be remembered we expect to have a good-sized plant on the stock before it is ready for a shift to a 3½-inch pot. Pot good and firm, firmer than you would rooted cuttings; water thoroughly and place in a house with a temperature of 45 degrees at night to 50 degrees in the day. Do not water again until you are absolutely certain they need it, or, I might better say, so long as the soil remains moist they will require no water at the roots. Dampen the stems of the stocks three or four times a day, according to the weather, using a fine spray so that the pots may not become soaked.

The Grafting Case.

Now, while waiting for the Manetti to root, it is time to get a grafting case ready and, although this need not be an elaborate affair, there are a few things that are very necessary. The case must be tight; this is the first and, I consider, the most important item. It ought to have bottom heat so that an even temperature of 75 degrees can be maintained day and night. We have had experience with all temperatures from 90 degrees down to 75 degrees and have come to the conclusion that 75 degrees is right.

The grafting case should have a fair amount of light. A rose house is a good place for a case during January and February grafting, but it must be shaded from the strong sun during the middle of the day, with some thin material that will not shut out all the light; newspapers are very satisfactory for a man who doesn't wish to waste money. A north propagating house can be used with good results during March, when rose houses are becoming too hot for the best work.

In regard to size, this is not so important. We have done good work with a case seven feet wide, two feet high in the middle, even span, one sash on each side, hinged at the top; also in a small case three feet wide, one sash, eighteen inches high at the back and twelve inches at the front. These I should say would be the extremes in size. Anything between would serve the purpose very well, but my preference would be for six inches to a foot of head room over the stocks when grafted.

Of course there are many notions and frills which may be added to suit the fancy of the builder, but I shall repeat the necessary points: First, have the case tight, not pretty tight nor anything but very tight. Second, have bottom heat and, third, have direct light. Put in two or three inches of coal ashes or sand, pound firmly and wet thoroughly, for this, it must be remembered, is where the necessary moisture is coming from for the first few days. If all instructions have been carried out everything should now be ready for the operation of grafting.

Care in Propagating.

The care of the propagating house should now be one of the most important duties because from the quality of the stock raised in this house depends the success of the crops, and any carelessness, neglect or unskilled treatment accorded to the stock at this stage will be reflected during the after life of the plant.

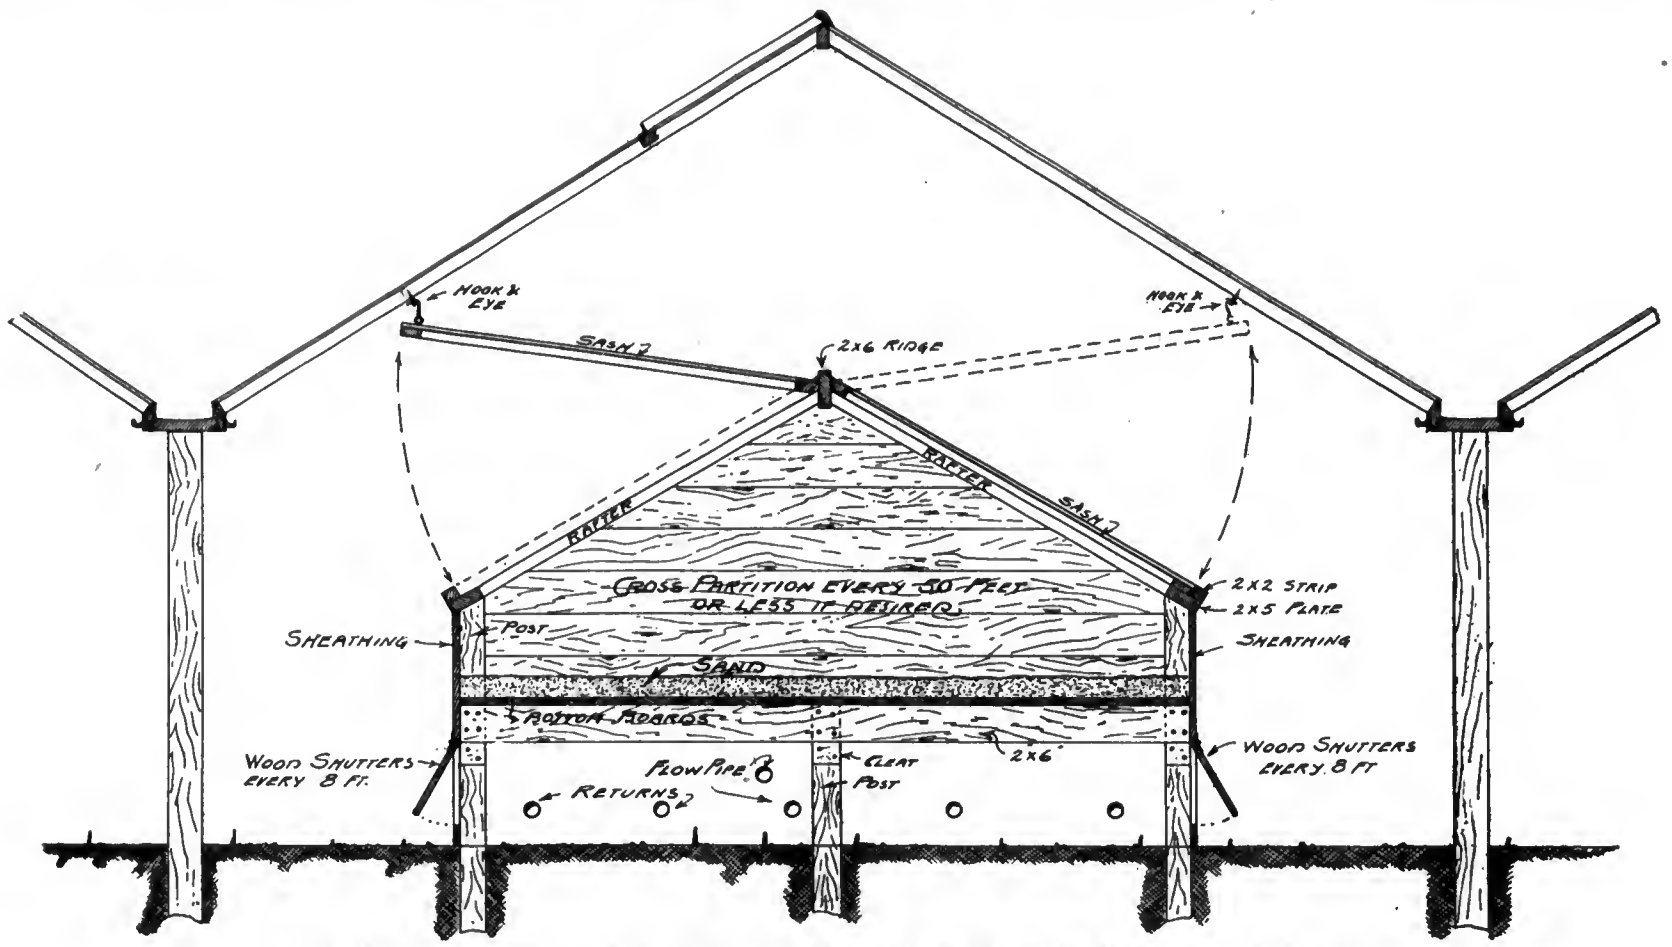
Many of the ills which trouble the plants during the winter months are contracted while they are yet cuttings in the bench and though they may seemingly recover from the checks received there by the good treatment given them while in pots and after being benched, the fact must never be forgotten that this check reduced the vitality at the time when vigor was most required to lay the foundation of a good root action.

To avoid extreme and sudden fluctuations of temperature in the propagating house requires unceasing care, especially where the house is low and the benches raised so as to be near the glass. as the cold air from the outside is apt to fall on the cuttings before being modified by the temperature of the house.

It can be readily seen that with the temperature of the sand at 62 degrees and a house temperature 10 degrees lower, where the house is small great care must be taken to keep a steady temperature and that it is liable to either a sudden raise or fall at short notice.

The question of moisture also requires careful consideration and the grower has to be guided by the weather. It is, however, a wise plan to keep on the safe side by having plenty of moisture and if the sand in the benches does not require moistening every day during the dark weather the paths can be moistened frequently, thus securing a sufficiency to preserve the leaves in good condition until root formation has progressed far enough to give the supply.

Shading should be attended to in order to prevent any wilting of the foliage, as the leaves being so much softer after a prolonged spell of dark, cloudy weather, are more liable to suffer when they are exposed to a sudden burst of sunshine.



Have a supply of soil in good condition, so that the young plants may receive no check by being potted in cold, wet soil. The soil for first potting should be as near the temperature of the sand in the cutting bench as possible so that the tender young rootlets may be neither chilled nor scorched.

The temperature of the potting shed should also be a matter of consideration as exposure to a high dry temperature is just as fatal to these tender members as exposure to too low a temperature, and of course too long an exposure to even the right temperature is equally fatal.

RIBES.

EEL WORMS.

We are sending you two sample rose plants, Bridesmaids, from two houses on our place, with soil for examination, also a separate package of black sod soil which we could secure if it is better than the clay soil we have used, sample of which you will see about the roots of the two plants. The plant from No. 12 was planted from healtny young stock May 11, our own propagation. The one marked No. 14, planted May 16, 2½-inch stock bought and shifted once, to 3-inch, before it was benched. The plants were watered carefully by experienced growers who have hitherto had success with roses. They made a nice summer growth, were run at 58 degrees at night after cool weather began, and 65 to 70 degrees in the daytime. In August they had a dose of mildew, which spread through six continuous houses, the worst affected house being a house of Brides planted with grafted stock. They were without fires several nights in August and July, when it was needed. We began firing the middle of August. They were given close care to eradicate the mildew, but it held on more stubbornly than we have ever had it do before. Again in October the plants made a nice growth. About the last of October they began to go back, dropping their leaves badly, and looking very bad. Ever since the blooms have been off color, the foliage a bad color, and absolutely no growth from the base anywhere in the houses; almost none at the top. We have held them on the dry side during this illness and tried to get them to a point where they would stand watering freely, but have hardly got them to budge. They seem to stand stock still. They have never been overwatered, never had a severe chilling, as a registering thermometer has been used and we have a careful night fireman. Steam heat is used. The growers cannot satisfy themselves what is the matter, or what the treatment ought to be, as we have other houses in the same kind of soil and under the same growers doing well. Please give us your ideas of the trouble, and the best course to pursue. G. & S.

The More Elaborate Type of Grafting Case, Used by Bassett & Washburn, Hinsdale, Ill.

The samples of soil are all of good quality and capable of raising high grade roses. The soil from house No. 12 is a fairly good soil though not quite so rich and suited for roses as that from No. 14, which is a most excellent soil and as near the rose growers' ideal as possible, and much superior to the sample of black prairie soil in the package.

The trouble with these roses is, I am sorry to state, one of the worst that can befall them. They are infested with that much dreaded scourge, eel worm, which when it has once obtained a good foothold is one of the worst troubles known to the grower, because there is no remedy which can be applied without destroying the plants and because it rarely manifests itself until the season is too far advanced to allow of the only remedy being administered with profit, and that is to throw out all the plants and soil, cleanse the house and replant with fresh, vigorous stock.

This nematode is found everywhere, in salt and fresh water, in damp earth and moss and among decaying substances and is always present in rose soils. They are always minute and require a microscope of high power to detect them. Their mode of attacking the rose plant is to encyst themselves in the fibre of the small feeding roots. Around these small cysts tubercles form which sometimes grow as large as a grain of barley but are often very much smaller. If these are opened they will be found to contain from one to five small worms, which much resemble eels, hence the name. They are too minute to be detected by the ordinary naked eye but the tubercles can be seen if the soil is carefully washed off the roots.

Like many other lower forms of animal life they are capable of retaining their vitality for a long period, even under the most seeming adverse conditions, which accounts for their wide distribution. Like most other pests they are more liable to confine their ravages to those plants in which the vitality is low, and seldom, if ever, attack a house of well handled, vigorous stock. The fact that these roses were reduced in vitality by the severe and long continued attack of mildew may in a measure account for this and possibly the stock may not have been very vigorous at the start.

It would be unwise to propagate from such stock, as the vitality is low and any young stock from them would be liable to fall a prey to this or any other trouble during the short days when root action would be sluggish. RIBES.

AZALEA MOLLIS.

Please give the treatment required in the growing of Azalea mollis to have it in bloom at Easter. I have not grown it before. W. W.

These plants as soon as received should have the balls thoroughly soaked and, after allowing them to drip, they should be potted in any good garden soil. They should then be put into a cool pit or frame and protected from severe frost. To have them in bloom at Easter they should be brought into the house and for the first two weeks be exposed to a temperature of about 50 degrees. When they begin to show signs of moving the temperature should be gradually raised till it reaches 55 degrees. They require usually six or seven weeks of this treatment to bring them into bloom. R.

TOWN WANTS A FLORIST.

The Commercial Club of Larned, Kan., is promoting an effort to build a commercial greenhouse to grow plants and cut flowers and would be glad to get a good florist, who has some money, to come and take charge of the building and run in for all there is in it. This is a splendid location, not a greenhouse nearer than seventy miles, a number of flourishing towns near and demand constantly increasing. I only have a small greenhouse and do not care to bother with it. I will give all needed information to anyone who writes to me.

TYRA MONTGOMERY,
Box 186, Larned, Kan.

PANSIES.

Please tell us how to make pansies bloom and bear flowers on long stems; heat, soil, water, care, etc. C. S. T.

To secure a crop of pansy blooms in the greenhouse during the winter months, the seed should be sown early in August and should be shaded until the plants are showing the character leaf. As soon as the plants are large enough to bear handling they should be transplanted into a cold frame, giving each plant at least three inches of space. Before the frost has had a chance to give them a check they should be transplanted into a bench having three inches of a light, sandy soil which should be enriched with decomposed manure in the proportion of one of manure to four of soil.

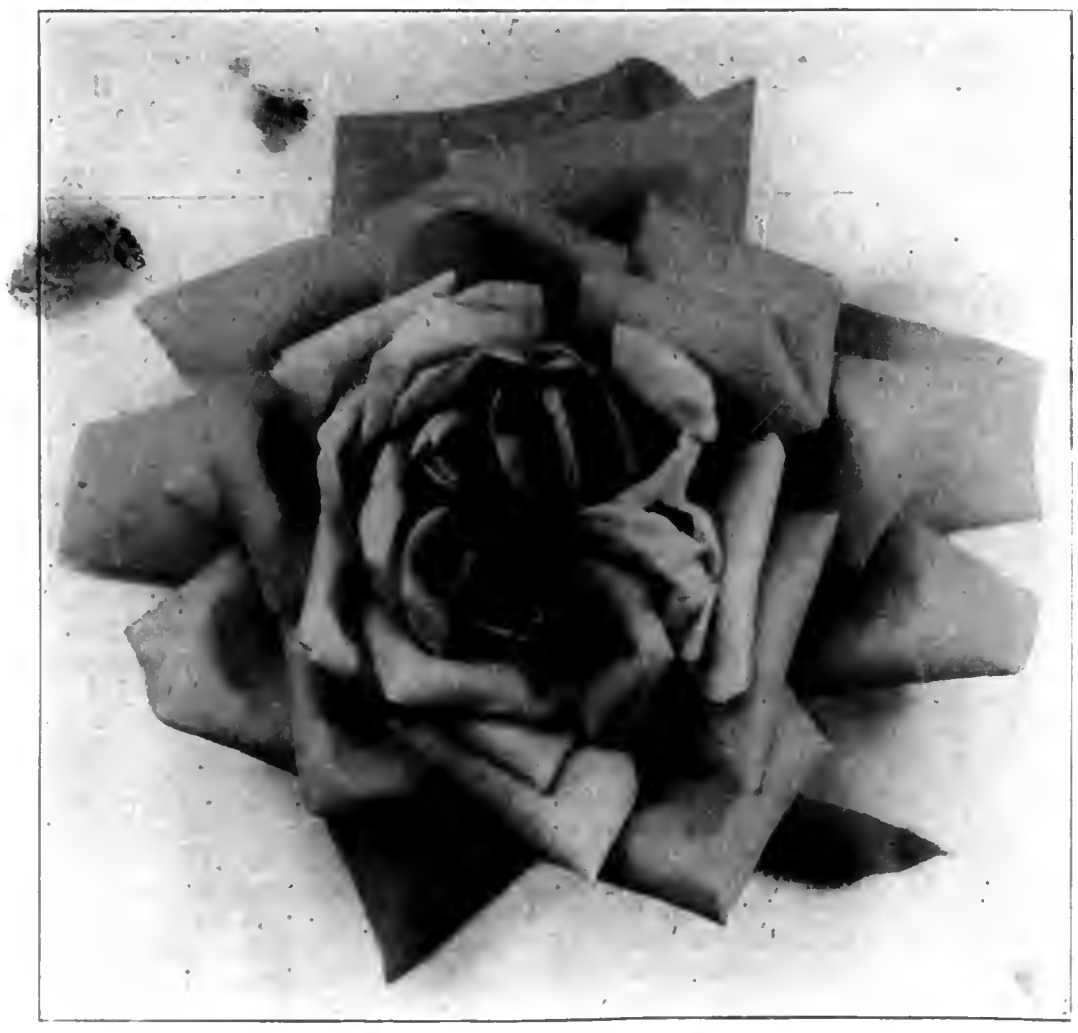
As the pansy is a water-loving plant, good drainage must be provided to prevent the soil from becoming sodden, as this will certainly ruin the crop. The pansy, being a native of northern Europe, requires a low temperature and does best at 45 degrees at night. During bright sunshine the temperature may be allowed to run up to 60 degrees but this must be accompanied by plenty of ventilation. By giving them a place on the bench where they will have a maximum of sunlight and taking care that they never suffer from want of water, a good crop can be had, even during the darkest weather.



By selecting a good strain of seed, one which has a habit of producing long flower stems, and selecting seed from such each year you can secure a strain to suit your purpose. R.

BULBOUS STOCK FOR EASTER.

Kindly tell us the length of time required to bring tulips, daffodils and narcissi into bloom. They are now in cold frames without heat, potted in September and are apparently well rooted. We have a well lighted house with night temperature of 60 degrees. I desire them for Easter. R. R. B.

The time required to bring tulips, etc., into bloom varies very much with the season. To bring them into bloom in January or February in a temperature of 60 degrees would require from twenty-one to twenty-eight days for tulips and Paper Whites, and about a week longer for daffodils; 60 degrees is rather a high temperature in which to produce good flowers with stiff stems; 55 degrees is much better.

Easter being late this year, the trouble with this class of stock will be in holding it back and the only way to gauge the time to have them in bloom at that date will be to watch them closely and exercise your best judgment, as much depends on the kind of weather we may have at that time. R.

AN AMERICAN ROSARIAN.

The widely varying uses which men make of equal opportunities is a constant subject for interested study for all those who have the slightest strain of philosophy in their make-up. And opportunity is not always that object well clothed with hirsute before but very bald behind, as some would have us believe, to be grasped in the fleeting or forever lost. Rather is opportunity the chance given all men to work out each for himself the destiny toward which his nature leads. Starting at a common point, to what opposite goals do we make our way, and to what various uses do we put the objects and occurences encountered on our journey! Each will use the material in his own way, and after his own fashion achieve a varying degree of success. It will be remembered that so simple a thing as an apple played a large part in the lives and fortunes of at least three men who will live in history for the various uses to which they put the fruit, Old Adam, William Tell and Sir Isaac Newton.

And so it is in the history of our trade. Given a tiny greenhouse, one man expands it into a great range of glass, while another lets it go into decay. One grows vegetables, because of less necessity for skill and application, while another grows Beauties because the difficulties in the path to success bring richer rewards when won. Still another plants, and waters, and reaps, purely for the harvest of dollars, while his neighbor, content with a reasonable number of the comforts which money brings, turns with interest to those branches of our profession which add to the sum of human happiness. Among these latter E. Gurney Hill has won his place by the success which has attended his many years of careful hybridization.

If he is to be applauded who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before, how much greater place in our honor is due the man who makes two rose blooms grow where but one grew before. The greenhouses of the Hill Company are largely given over to the raising and trial of improved varieties and their distribution to the American trade. Mr. Hill says the tendency is toward a still further reduction of the space given to staples and a specialization on novelties.

E. Gurney Hill.

In the autumn, interest centers on the chrysanthemums, which constitute one of the largest collections in the United States. Not only are all the European and American novelties tried, but many seedlings are raised. The list of varieties recently published by the Chrysanthemum Society of America names the Hill Company as raiser of dozens and introducer of scores of one-time favorites, many of which are still in the race with the newer sorts. This year the leader of their set is a French variety, Mlle. Jeannie Nonin, a large white, which bids fair to prolong the season for good flowers well into December.

The Richmond Rose.

While the name of Hill is intimately associated with the development of the carnation, at the present moment interest in the establishment centers in the new roses. There are several benches of seedlings and new European sorts, which are an interesting study, but these must rest until the visitor has seen the new red rose, which so good a grower and judge of things floricultural as Wm. Duckham, of Madison, N. J., says will surely displace Liberty as well as all others of its color. This is Richmond, a seedling raised by Mr. Hill by crossing Lady Battersea with Liberty. It has little advantage in color over Liberty, but is so far superior in growth as to have gained the warm endorsement of everyone who has seen it growing. First, and most important, it shows no tendency to go dormant in the autumn, as does Liberty, but blooms freely all winter, surprising with its floriferousness those who have watched it most solicitously. Comparing the season's cut with that of Liberty, it is much larger; that can be seen at a glance. Mr. Hill puts it in figures which his associates declare are very conservative but which look too big to be credible and are hence told only to the man who is on the spot and has the evidence of the plants before his eyes.

A comparison of own-root grafted plants is at present in favor of the own-root stock. The grafts show few of the ground shoots which are springing up so numerously on the own-root plants. Indeed, these growths from the ground are the wonder of all who see the plants. The top growths, too, throw good stems and after a flower has been cut the eye is quick to break. The bud is long, pointed, can be, and in fact, should be cut tight, opens gracefully to a good size, and the flower is delightfully fragrant. The petalage is the same as Liberty.

Mr. Hill has Richmond in a house with Bridesmaid, same soil, same temperature, which spells good-bye to Meteor wherever that variety is still grown. The soil is a clay loam, with an admixture of leafmold, and it is to be expected that in other localities Richmond will be done fully as well if not better. Incidentally the visiting rose grower will note that on an adjoining bench of Bridesmaid half the plants are on their own roots, and half grafted on Manetti. The line of division is plainly apparent; growth is, to try to reduce it to figures, at least twenty per cent stronger on the grafted plants. They are all on benches with four inches of soil.

A year ago when Mr. Hill first owned himself thoroughly convinced that he had a good thing in Richmond (he called it Etna then) he had sixty plants. Now he has 5,000. The way they cut up those sixty plants was a caution, but they are still there and as healthy and vigorous as you could ask. So is the new stock. Some of the cuttings were put in the sand as late as May 6, and are fine, strong plants. A part of a bench planted from thumb pots in October is now giving a cut.

Since it was learned to cut the buds tight shipments have been made to exhibitions and club meetings all over the country. The flowers traveled perfectly and kept for days. Many retailers, like Small & Son, at Washington, have asked for regular shipments, but these, in view of the necessity for propagating over 125,000 plants, could not be supplied. The flowers Mr. Hill took to Washington on a recent trip, after they had served his purpose, were sent by Smalls to Mrs. Hay, wife of the Secretary of State, and there is already an established demand for Richmond at the capital.

Some of the blooms sent to the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club meeting December 20, graced Wm. Nicholson's table at his Christmas dinner.

Other New Sorts.

To pass on to other varieties, a house of Rosalind Orr English, a pink seedling of Chatenay, raised on the place, is a splendid sight. The growth is wonderful and the cut large and continuous. This rose will never displace any other, but it will be popular in the way its parent is. The cut of this house all goes to Bertermann Bros., Indianapolis, and they think highly of it. There are two other red seedlings which are being tried, Joe Hill and Robin Hood, which promise interesting developments. A cross between White Lady and Kaiserin is closely watched. But most interesting of all is a first break from Beauty.

Among the scores of imported varieties is one of Dickson's which is well liked. It is Mildred Grant, winner of the gold medal in England for three successive years. It is cream white, with pink shading. Some who have tried it under glass say it is very susceptible to mildew, but it is not so here. Muriel Graham is a beautiful thing, a light sport from Catherine Mermet, and possessing all the characteristics of its parent. Buds of these two are but indifferently shown in one of the accompanying illustrations. Mrs. David McKee is one which Dickson introduced as yellow, but here it is cream white. There is an American variety, Shellem's Pink, raised by John A. Shellem, Philadelphia, of which great things were expected, but which has proved a disappointment as a forcing rose. It is a cross of Maman Cochet and Kaiserin, and, while it will not do in winter, Mr. Hill thinks it a decided acquisition for spring and summer.

In one house there are thousands upon thousands of Manetti stocks potted up. Each year 75,000 grafts are made. Fred Lemon has immediate charge of this work. He says that such a number rolls off one's tongue very easily, but that the operation itself is no inconsiderable task. He prefers English to French Manetti, and does not feel the need of the elaborate grafting case used in some places. He takes a tight bench, builds sides of matched lumber to the requisite heights, partitions as wanted, covers with hot-bed sash and loses only one or two per cent of his grafts. When the sash do not fit just as they should he stuffs the cracks with damp moss to make the case tight. He runs his case about 85 degrees.

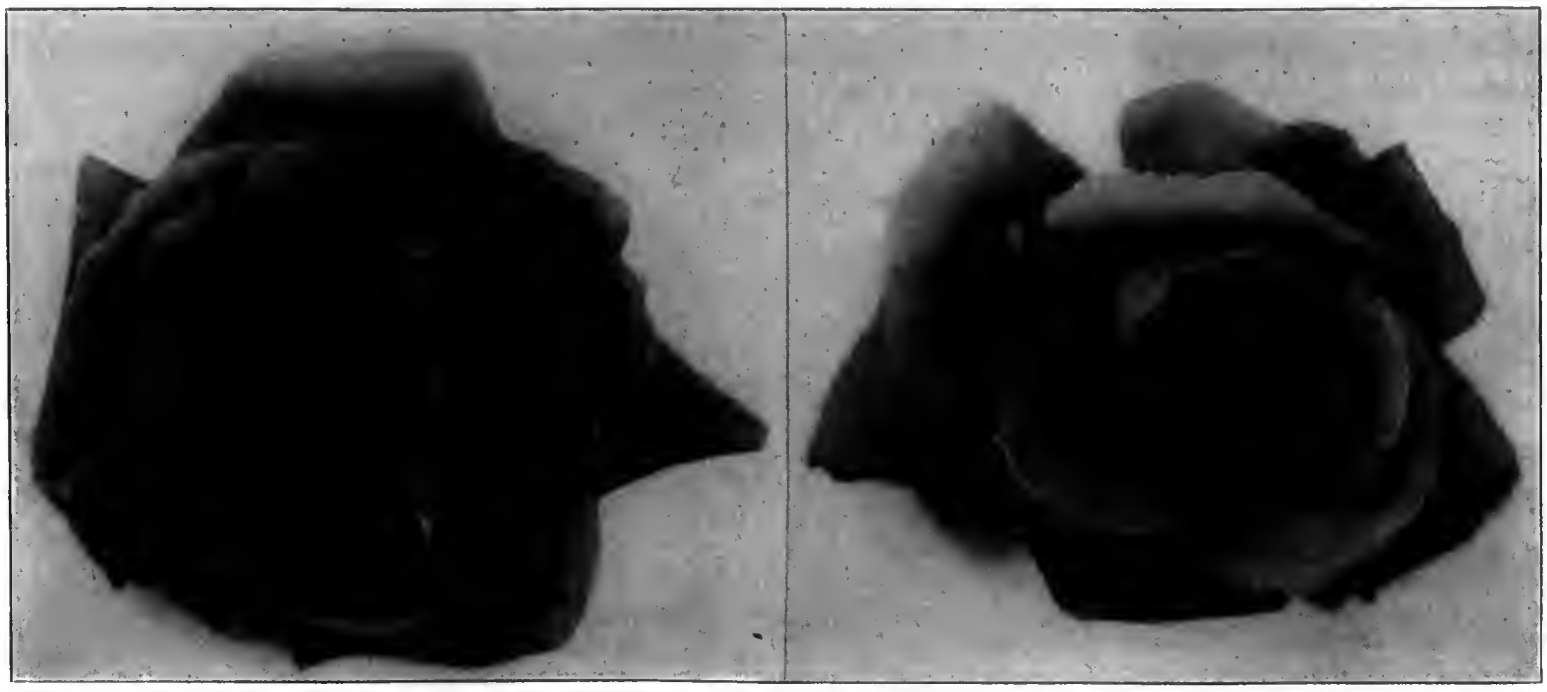
In one house there is a nice lot of the new French rose, Mme. Norbert Levavasseur popularly known in this country as the Baby Rambler. Mr. Hill says it will be a gem for a bedder and as an Easter pot plant. It is everblooming; in fact, it blooms itself to death. In connection with the circumstance that a firm bought the American monopoly of this rose only to find that it had reached the trade here in large numbers through prior dissemination in England, it is of interest to know that Mr. Hill thinks he had the first plants to reach this country. An English friend, seeing the novelty, sent him a dozen plants with his compliments. A list from England recently quoted this rose and Mr. Hill straightway cabled; he got only 500 plants, but they cost 8 cents apiece. Quotations here are $35 per hundred and selling fast.

A big lot of hybrid roses are sold every season and thousands of hardwood cuttings are now in the sand. One bench contained over 40,000 cuttings of Richmond, cool and rooting nicely. All the young stock is grown cool here. They don't believe in hurrying the rooting, even if they have one order for 100,000 carnation cuttings, and each year need more rose, carnation, chrysanthemum and geranium stock than they can produce. That's the result of not chasing the Almighty Dollar too hard.

In Other Houses.

Speaking of carnations, several houses are grown and in fine shape. Mr. Hill is thinking better of Flamingo as the season advances. He is going to plant Prosperity more largely next year. Lady Bountiful is a gem here. There is a fine pink sport of Enchantress that will be worked up. The sales on Cardinal are very satisfactory. There are many seedlings under trial, too numerous to mention, save one, a very large white, which Mr. Hill thinks will just suit the growers in England, in whom he is interested from the fact that each season he sends many thousand cuttings across the water. American carnations are rapidly gaining in popularity there. They are still generally grown in pots, but some are applying American methods of culture in growing for market.

The grower of miscellaneous stock will find much to interest him at Hill's, particularly in geraniums. All the European novelties are tried, and most of them promptly discarded. But a house given to plants for stock at all times contains the cream of the varieties. Still Mr. Hill says that nothing sells so well as the old S. A. Nutt.



Mr. Hill's Associates.

Mr. Hill has associated with him in the company his son-in-law, Fred H. Lemon, his son, Joseph Hill, and his sister, Sarah A. Hill, the latter in charge of the office. It is an aggregation of talent rather beyond the needs of the present range of glass, and plans are being made to enlarge the business to afford full scope for the energies of the younger men. Land has been bought adjoining the Pennsylvania railroad, where a large and strictly up-to-date range of houses will some day go up.

The ebullitions of some of the writers for the humorous weeklies have created the impression in many minds that southern "Injiany" is one of the waste places of the earth. Such is far from the fact. It is a fair and prosperous land, and Richmond is a modern city of wealth and refinement, inhabited by progressive people, whose hospitality is of such sincerity that those who are able to visit her florists on their way to or from the Chicago carnation meeting will remember it as one of the most pleasant experiences of their trip.

PANSIES DON'T BLOOM.

Please inform a southern subscriber why pansy plants bought in November, 1904, in full bloom, did not continue blooming after they were planted in cold frames, and given very rich soil, manure from an old hot-bed, plenty of air and good treatment generally. It is impossible to grow plants here in the fall early enough to bloom in winter, owing to the very dry autumns in Alabama. F. J. U.

PHYLLOCACTUS.

I am sending you a branch of cactus with fruit on it. I think the sample is sufficient to enable you to identify the variety. This plant had a number of such fruits. What is the variety, and are they good to eat? In breaking open, they seem to be deliciously flavored.

W. L.

The branch of cactus submitted with this letter is of the species now called phyllocactus, of South American and Mexican origin, (Cereus phyllanthus and Cereus phyllanthoides of De Candolle.) The phyllocactus is the most ornamental and satisfactory of cacti. Most fruits of the cactus order are edible, though all are not equally palatable. These, however, seem to be deliciously flavored. Even the fruit of the common opuntia is said to be very fine in the West Indies.

The phyllocactus has been so long a favorite in cultivation that it has varied into a multitude of colors, forms and habits. The flowers are usually large, brilliantly colored and elegantly shaped and most forms are free bloomers. A white-flowered, night-blooming sort, P. latifrons, is called the queen cactus. P. phyllanthoides, one of the original species, was discovered by Humboldt in South America and it has been a prime favorite ever since its introduction. The flowers are bright rose color, streaked with white and shaded with darker red and about four inches across. Over seventy-five varieties of phyllocatus are listed by cultivators.

PROPAGATING VIOLETS.

I have a bunch of Marie Louise violets growing in my lettuce house which are doing finely, but, owing to the lack of space, I shall have to throw them out and replant the bench with lettuce. Could I take off some of the rooted runners and pot them up into small pots and thereby grow them on in pots until time to plant them in the field, or would you advise me to grow them straight on in pots and plant in the bench about April or May? N. O.

You can take off the rooted runners and pot them up as you say. We always think it advisable, as I have said before in these columns, to have more than just a sufficient supply for your winter wants; therefore, I would take off all the stock that was good, potting up such as are in the proper condition, putting the balance of the cuttings in the propagating bed, potting them also as soon as rooted, taking care that they do not get stunted, shifting them as needed and planting them direct from the pots into the borders when the house is ready, growing them inside, this always providing you can give the house sufficient air during the summer. The balance can be either carried on through the season in pots or planted out in the field. In this way you have plenty of good stock to take the place of vacancies or poor plants as they appear at times in the house and the surplus will find a ready sale in the fall, and will more than pay for the extra trouble taken. R. E. SHUPHELT.

PEONIES FOR EASTER.

Will you have someone with experience tell us how to force peonies for Easter?

S. & L.

The most suitable varieties for forcing are the Moutan or tree peonies and to get the best results they should be potted in the spring and grown all summer, as they rarely flower well if lifted in the fall and forced during winter.

If potted in spring and carefully attended to during the summer they should be taken inside as soon as the leaves drop and kept in a temperature not to exceed 40 degrees until such time as they are started.

As much of the top soil as can be, without injuring the roots, should then be removed and a rich compost put in its place. They should then be placed in a temperature of 52 degrees until the eyes break, when the temperature should be gradually raised till 60 degrees is reached. They can be bloomed successfully in 56 degrees, but this takes a much longer time.

When they are growing freely and until the buds show color, they are greatly benefited by an application of liquid food at least once a week.

After being forced they require at least three years of field culture to recuperate before being fit to force again.

CANTALOUPES.

There seem to be very few who have attempted to grow cantaloupes under glass for market and these few claim that it is hard to get a profitable price out of them. Demand would naturally be created if more of them were placed upon the market. Some people might come along who would be willing to pay a good price for them from a novelty point of view, but these novelty-seekers are too few and far between to be counted on as profitable buyers. Still we can't get away from the fact that a nice fresh muskmelon is about as fine a fruit as can be placed on the table at any season of the year and during the winter and spring months should have an especial value. It therefore seems reasonable enough to expect that if the right class of people could be reached they would be willing to pay a price high enough to make it worth while for the grower to handle this crop. Only, I would advise those who contemplate trying it to go rather limited on it at first until they see how they are likely to come out.

The general cultivation of cantaloupes is similar to that of cucumbers, so that a few plants could be tried in the cucumber house. Where the greatest difference comes in is at the setting stage. Cucumber flowers can be set according as they appear, but with melons it is necessary to wait until eight or ten flowers can be had at one time or, if one or two only are set at one time, they will run away with the strength of the plant and it will be hard to get others to set and even if they do set they will not swell if one or two others have the lead. It is also necessary to support the fruit by a network of cords or some such device, as they get too heavy for the stem and would break away unless artificial support was given.

Regarding variety, I prefer those of European origin. Some good growers have told me that they were successful in forcing Emerald Gem, but I have never been able to obtain good flavor in this when forced. The best flavored varieties I have tried are Royal Favorite and Frogmore Scarlet, both of English origin and are good, free setters and healthy growers. Royal Favorite is the larger of the two, is nearly round in shape, closely netted and a beautiful fruit when well finished. Frogmore Scarlet, though not so large, matures earlier, is also a beautiful fruit, of a rich orange yellow when finished, though not so closely netted as the Favorite. A number of varieties of this class are in existence, but the above named are the best I have tried. W. S. Croydon.

WITH THE GROWERS.

J. M. Gasser Co., Cleveland.

This company's plant at Rocky River comprises nearly 300,000 feet of glass and one always finds something of interest. Mr. Anderson, the genial manager of the plant, was our escort. The orchid and fern house was the first. Quite a number of cattleyas, oncidiums and cypripediums were in prime condition, as were also some fine Boston ferns, Pandanus Veitchii and Dracaena terminalis.

Carnations were next. A large area is devoted to this flower and as a whole the stock looks remarkably good. Lawson predominates and at present the house is a field of bud and bloom, having been just right for Christmas. There is also a house of Enchantress with stems from two to three feet long and blooms of perfect color. Gov. Wolcott is not doing as well this year as last, being a trifle slow. White Cloud is still grown and more space will be occupied by this variety next year. Moonlight and Vesper are being tried on a limited scale and up to date are doing nicely. In red, Mrs. Potter Palmer has done well to date. Apollo is too small. Crane does not do well here. Estelle gives good results. Flamingo is somewhat diseased, but is a grand, good flower with stems nearly three feet long. They will propagate from healthy stock and try it again. In crimson Harry Fenn leads them all. Several of the latest introductions will be planted, including Fiancee, White Lawson and others. Mr. Gasser is sorry Robt. Craig is not out for the coming season.

Tower and Tank at J. M. Gasser Co.'s.

A larger space is devoted to the rose. Many varieties are planted and most of them look healthy and vigorous. Beauties are planted in limited quantities and at present are off crop but growth is strong and heavy. Maids and Brides were started late after resting, and are just in their first growth. Perle is in fine condition, being full of strong, red growth but not in heavy crop at present. Mme. Chatenay is one mass of buds, although Mr. Anderson says it is off crop. What a magnificent grower it is! Liberty is completely off and is considered too slow. Gen. MacArthur resembles Perle in growth, being an exceptionally vigorous variety, and does best at from 50 to 54 degrees. Meteor has been dropped altogether. A house 300 feet long devoted to Kaiserin is still producing some very fine flowers.

A large space is occupied by mums during the summer, being followed by lilies, azaleas and bulbous stock. A house of poinsettias for cutting with stems ten feet long was just right for Christmas. Lorraine begonias and cyclamen are also grown and are looking quite good.

It is said that another range will be added to this one either this or next year, as they are unable to meet the increasing demand for their shipping trade.

The Gasser Co. has a water supply at this place from a 15,000 gallon tank elevated sixty-three feet on an all iron tower. It was built by the W. E. Caldwell Co., Louisville, Ky.

NEW YORK FLORISTS' CLUB.

Monday evening, January 9, the first meeting of the New York Florists' Club for 1905 took place at the club's parlors and an enthusiastic crowd welcomed the beginning of what promises to be a most successful year. Vice-President Butterfield introduced the newly re-elected president, Frank E. Traendly, who received a most cordial greeting and responded with an address as follows:

President's Address.

I thank you heartily for the mark of confidence you have shown by re-electing me to the office of president for the ensuing year. Well attended meetings, a liberal response to our invitations to all who might have something to show on the nights set apart for special exhibits; good work by the different committees—all these have contributed to make the past year successful. That the same favorable conditions may be with us during the year to come is my earnest hope.

The club is in a flourishing condition and the treasurer's report will show a growing surplus, as the following extract proves:

Cash balance January 1, 1905..... 1,226.52

The membership is at present about 200, of which 147 are in good standing, thirty-two owe one year's dues and eighteen have received a final notice to make good their indebtedness at once. These figures may seem to compare unfavorably with last year's report, but the list of delinquents has been gone over by the board of trustees and a good deal of deadwood dropped from the roll. It is proper at this time to say to proposers of new members that the initiation fee of $3 must be handed in to the secretary with every proposition before a name can be presented to the club.

I recommend a repetition of last year's program to arrange for special exhibitions on stated nights during the year, beginning with carnations at the February meeting. It would tend to increase interest and make these nights still more attractive if we could have a paper read by a specialist on the principal exhibit of the evening.

I hesitate to refer to a revision of the rules governing the committee on award, but I have heard suggestions that the rules might be improved. I think, however, that matter may safely be left with the committee, and if it sees fit to make recommendations the club will consider them.

The house committee seems to have made itself indispensable and a fair appropriation for this year is advisable. I recommend that the committee make arrangements for a ladies' night for the February meeting and provide proper entertainment. If agreeable to the club I would suggest that we entertain the ladies again towards the close of the year.

Red Rose Robin Hood. Pink Rose Laura Wattine.

One or two illustrated lectures might be arranged for by the essay and entertainment committee during the year.

This is an opportune time to consider the subject of the club's annual outing and to invite suggestions as to the place where we are to go. As a member of the second outing committee, with some of its members, we visited all places near the city and found most of them undesirable or inaccessible, Wetzel Point grove being more attractive than any. This committee should be appointed at once with instructions to make arrangements with the management of the place determined upon at this meeting.

The bowling contingent is reminded that it is time to get to work, enlist recruits and try to make a good record for New York. We are not handicapped by distance to be traveled this year, and a good team ought to be got together and give a good account of itself in Washington this summer.

Concluding, I want to testify to the warm support given me by the officers of the club during the past year. The secretary has done his good share, and how much that amounts to is not generally appreciated by the majority of members. His work has been most valuable towards the club's welfare. The treasurer has seen to it that the club's funds have not been idle, and the fact that all but a couple of hundred dollars are drawing interest, which amounts to enough to pay two-thirds of our rent, shows with what zeal he cares for our interests. With the continued assistance of these, the other officers, committees and members, I hope to be able to serve you acceptably during the coming year.

The newly elected vice-president also responded with an address, mentioning some of the successes of the club and several of its hopes for the future.

Mr. Sheridan reported arrangements for an annual dinner at the St. Denis February 1, securing the popular Tommy Baker and his talented assistants as the amusement feature and the sale of more tickets than the total disposed of in 1904, with nearly a month of opportunity remaining. He would like to be advised at once by all who will attend. Mr. Nugent reported for the house committee and received a hearty vote of thanks.

Seven new members were elected and C. Albert Small, Frank McMahon, J. F. Marsden, Clarence Saltford and Wm. G. Muller were proposed. Mr. Wallace read a most satisfactory report of the board of trustees, showing $1,200 in the club's treasury. Secretary Young's report showed an average attendance of nearly 100 for the year, an addition of twenty-seven new members and the death of three.

Wm. Duckham, of Madison, gave a cordial invitation to the club to attend the annual Madison smoker on Wednesday evening and the acceptance of the members was voted unanimously. Mr. Wallace spoke for the American Carnation Society's exhibition at Chicago and suggested the journey of the eastern visitors in a body, predicting the best convention the Carnation Society had ever held. The holding of the usual summer outing was decided upon, the committee appointed being Messrs. Elliott, Birnie, Schenck, Craw, Langjahr, Reimels, Jr., Schmitz, Bunyard and Shaw.

The following committees were announced by the president: Legislative, John N. May, P. O'Mara and Chas. Allen; essay and entertainment, Nugent, Manda and Kuhne; awards, O'Mara, Lenker, Siebrecht, Birnie, Miller, Duckham and Totty.

Messrs. O'Mara, Ward, Phillips, Nash, Wallace and others discussed the suggestions in the vice-president's address as to increasing the membership and the establishment of a question box as a feature of subsequent meetings of the club. The house committee gave a special showing of its ability and the first meeting of the new year ended in harmonious enthusiasm as to the certainty of a successful record for 1905.

At the next meeting of the club the second Monday in February, there will be exhibits of carnations, the ladies will be guests and there will be a paper or address by a competent carnation grower.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

THE PITTSBURG CLUB'S METHOD.

The Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club held its regular monthly meeting Tuesday evening, January 3. The subject for consideration and discussion was "Plants, Flowers and Greens Used During the Christmas Holidays." It was also the night for nomination of officers for the ensuing year, the election being next meeting.

The club is in a most prosperous condition. It has 149 members and there are four proposals for membership to be acted on at the next meeting. During the year the monthly meetings have been most entertaining and instructive and at each meeting there has been an exhibition of flowers, plants and materials and the attendance has been large and the discussions spirited and critical. No papers have been read at any of the meetings, the officers of the club believing that the members give better heed to impromptu talks and criticisms, where every man present can say a word or give his opinion, rather than to papers on set subjects. The great aim has been to get every member interested and in an argumentative or confessional mood and if any man is afraid to open his mouth, ask him simple questions in his own line of work and in this way the most bashful member of the club has never refused or hesitated to give his opinion about practical matters or to tell how he does things at home. Secrets! There are no cultural secrets in this club. And the members are always attentive and orderly and there is never any one leaving the hall before the meeting closes. In fact, it seldom happens that we get quite through at 10 o'clock.

During the year we have had two smokers and a summer picnic and all paid for out of the general funds of the club. Today every debt of the club is paid and there is between $20 and $30 in the treasury. This shows interest and economical management on the part of the entertainment committee and their smokers and picnic were lavish in refreshments, amusement and music.

All of the officers of the present year were re-nominated for election for next year, except the president. He has served in this capacity for several years and declined a re-nomination, urging that the honor should not stay too long in one man's hand. So T. P. Langhans was nominated for the presidency. Mr. Langhans was secretary of the club for several years and is thoroughly interested in its prosperity and we all look upon him as a most happy choice. PREX.

I beg to hand you herewith a dollar in payment for another year's subscription to the most valuable of trade papers. This amount I consider well invested, as it pays me many dollars back, for whenever in need of stock it is so easy to find what you want offered by some of your advertisers. CHAS. OTTO HORN

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

A New Disease.

In this vicinity there has recently appeared on plants of Lawson, an affection of the stem unlike anything before seen. Growers in other sections may be acquainted with it, but, from what can be learned on short notice, it seems to be a new disease. My purpose in giving information regarding this trouble is to ask if others have any knowledge concerning it, also to induce every grower to be on the watch for it, or, if already discovered and experience has resulted in finding the cause, a remedy or preventive, to give some light on the matter.

I first heard of it from a grower who wrote describing it as follows:

"A bud and its stem will look perfectly sound and healthy and in a good many cases the flower will develop perfectly, but on picking same, there will be found low down on the stem a place about an inch long where it appears dead and is brittle. In a large per cent of the cases this affected place is covered with a short, thin, white, fuzzy mold. If cut between the diseased spot and flower, it will keep all right, but cut below that spot and the flower, it fades before twelve hours. The affected stem appears to draw sap from the plant, but will not draw water."

Having never seen such a thing myself, or had any experience with anything similar, I have looked over other places, and while it does not seem to be a prevailing trouble, it is not confined to the one grower in question.

I might give a lengthy article on the result of various experiments and theories of probable causes, etc., but readers of the REVIEW want the facts from the first. None of us know it all, but I hope some one knows something definite about this trouble. GEO. S. OSBORN.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Essentials in Propagating.

During the next eight weeks you will have the best weather of the year for propagating carnations. Steady firing will enable you to keep a little bottom heat, while at the same time you will be able to keep the top cool. After getting your cuttings into the sand and watered in well your main attention will be directed toward keeping the cuttings in a fresh state until the roots start. This requires good judgment and constant watching, especially if the days are warm and bright.

Shading and spraying are the two things resorted to to counteract the effects of the sun, and if they are done judiciously there need be no loss from that source. No iron-clad rule can be laid down as to the amount of either of these should be done, but a safe rule to go by is to keep the cuttings fresh and crisp, with just as little shading or spraying as you can. Too much is but little less harmful than not enough. Always bear in mind that if you can keep the cuttings fresh for three or four weeks you will have success. A badly wilted carnation cutting might just as well be thrown out right away.

You will find a great difference in varieties; some will remain crisp and take root in three weeks while others will look wilty in spite of all you can do and will drag along for six weeks before striking roots. These latter kinds are the ones you will have the most trouble with. They are usually of a very soft growth and will damp off if you spray them too much or become covered with rust, which makes them unfit to grow. These will want close shading and not much spraying. Adonis and Mrs. Nelson belong to this class. Then you will find such varieties as Lawson, Crane and Enchantress will wilt slightly only a few days and if they receive one or two light sprayings each day, according to the weather, they will straighten up in about a week and go right ahead rooting. E. Crocker, Queen Louise, Harlowarden, Moonlight and such narrow-grassed varieties, are the easiest to root. They will need but little spraying outside of the watering to do them nicely.

Do most of your spraying before noon so the cuttings can dry off before night, else you will bring on rust and perhaps damping off. Put on your shade in the morning before the sun strikes the cuttings fairly so there is no danger of wilting but in the evening remove the shade and let them have the weak sunshine for a half hour or an hour to help dry them off. Then if there does happen to be a little wilting they will have all night to freshen up again. These little spells of sunshine do the cuttings a world of good. It is a great mistake to use a bench that the sun never strikes until spring. As the cuttings root you can increase the amount of sunshine and by the time they are ready to come out you can let them have all the sun there is for a few days and there will be much less wilting after potting and a quicker start into a strong growth. Draughts of air should always be avoided as they will cause wilting as much as too much sun.

Watch the sand closely and water before the cuttings suffer. Notice every evening, as the sand will show dryness better then than in the morning. It should not be soggy, but just thoroughly moist. On bright days dampen the boards and the walks to help keep the atmosphere moist. Do not put any permanent shading over the cuttings or on the glass, because on cloudy days they will want all the light there is, and to darken them will make them soft. With good judgment you ought to root 100 per cent of your cuttings.

VARIEGATED LAWSON.

W. B. Arnold, of the Rockland Greenhouses, Rockland, Mass., whose Variegated Lawson was illustrated in these columns a couple of weeks ago, has contracted to give his entire output of cuttings of that variety to the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., who are introducing a White Lawson this season. The deal was consummated upon the day of a recent visit by Frank R. Pierson to the Rockland Greenhouses.

GIBSON BEAUTY DROPPED.

The REVIEW is in receipt of the subjoined letter over the signature of the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., and the Swan Peterson Floral Co.

We wish to announce to the trade that Gibson Beauty, the new carnation that we have sold so extensively, has not come up this season to its past record or our expectations, being a late bloomer and giving but few blooms before Christmas. We have decided not to disseminate same and have canceled all orders that have been placed.

While the failure of this promising variety is a disappointment to all concerned, it is greatly to the credit of the introducers that they should decide to withdraw it, not alone because they voluntarily cancel a large number of orders, but because each of the firms had devoted a large amount of valuable space to plants for stock and many thousand of cuttings were already rooted or in the sand.

McKINLEY DAY.

Don't forget about McKinley day, January 29, the day when every one wears a carnation. There promises to be an abundant supply of stock this year, and we should make the fullest use of the opportunity. But don't raise prices; the time for that may come when the observance of the day is a little more firmly established.

Call the attention of your local newspaper men to the approach of the day and the custom of observing it by wearing a carnation. Put an advertisement in the paper, or at least a sign in your window. Early in the morning of the day, if you can spare the stock, go to the street car barns and see that every crew is decorated as it starts out. The force of example is strong.

FAIRY RING.

I am sending a few carnation buds in order that you may tell me what is the trouble. Some of the plants are all right while on others the buds turn yellow and dry up. The tips of the leaves are dried on some of the plants. F. J. P.

Your carnations are affected with fairy-ring. As this is a fungous disease. First of all pick off all the buds and leaves that are spotted and burn them. Then spray them with formaline diluted to 500 to one. This is one of the best fungicides or germicides known and will do the work if anything will. Spray them thoroughly two or three times a week for two or three weeks; then decrease to one spraying each week until you see the plants are entirely clean. Do the spraying in the morning of a bright day, so the plants can dry off before night. If any more spots appear, keep them picked off, as the disease will spread if left on the plants. You might also paint one of the steam pipes with a paste made of half sulphur and half lime, mixed with water, to help keep the atmosphere pure.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The first week of the New Year has been a disappointment so far as business was concerned; everybody is complaining. Good roses were scarce and high priced, but there were enough to go around. Carnations were plentiful; the good stock sold at a reasonable price but the poor stock and small flowers went to the dump. In fact, there seems to be too much "crap" of all kinds and at a time like this it must all go to the dump. The first week of the year has produced a variety of weather, opening with a spring day, then a blizzard with a terrible wind and winding up with the heaviest snow of the year.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club met last Tuesday evening. After a discussion of plants and Christmas greens, the nomination of officers was taken up. As Wm. Falconer, who has served as president for several years, declined to allow his name to be used again, T. P. Langhans, secretary of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., was nominated for president, together with the officers of the preceding year, namely, vice-president, E. C. Reineman; secretary, H. P. Joslin; assistant secretary, E. C. Ludwig; treasurer, Fred Burki; executive committee, P. S. Randolph, John Bader and Fred Burki. The report of the secretary showed the club to be in a prosperous condition, with 149 members and a good balance in the treasury.

January 29 will be McKinley day and, as it has become the custom to honor this day by wearing a carnation, it might be well for the growers to be prepared with an extra cut for that day.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is receiving a fine cut of white, red and yellow tulips grown by Patrick Maier.

G. & J. W. Ludwig are issuing a very handsome catalogue of floral work, containing many fine half tones of original designs.

Randolph & McClements executed a very handsome decoration at the Duquesne club last Saturday night, for the annual banquet of the operative officials of the Carnegie Steel Co.

J. B. Murdoch & Co., Van Eman, Pa., contemplate erecting a new range of houses in the near future.

J. K. Hutchinson was in a wreck on the P. Ft. & C. near Alliance, O., last Saturday. He escaped with a few bruises and a good shaking up.

Our street stands have fine carnations which they are offering at 20 cents per dozen.

B. E. Blackly, of Homestead, has been having trouble with his eyes the past two weeks.

Anton Krut, Jr., of Butler, has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his mother and sister during the holidays.

Hoo-Hoo.

A Birthday Party.

John Bader was 60 years old on Thursday, January 5. My! No one would take him to be over 50! So that evening half a hundred of his warm, personal friends, church, school and political, gathered at his castle on Troy Hill to cheer him up and wish him many happy returns. They presented him with a magnificent silver loving cup in testimony of their esteem for him. That John is a sound churchman, the presence of three clergymen at his table was good evidence. He has long been a school director and while he leans to the Democratic party, most of us think he isn't at all a bad Republican. As a business man, John is a pronounced success. Coming to this country from Germany a young gardener, he drifted into commercial life and now he is the leading plantsman in western Pennsylvania and outside of his florists' business he is a large property holder. John is rich and he is a mighty good fellow, too, honest as sunlight, straight as an arrow, vigorous, aggressive and progressive. It is the sincere wish of everyone who knows him that he may have many, many more happy birthdays.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The rush of the holidays being over, things are getting down to their normal standard. Business has been rather dull the past week, but the coming week promises to be better. Carnations are scarce, especially white and red. Good roses are scarce, for there is a healthy demand for choice blooms. Bulbous stock is plentiful, with prices about the same. There is a fair call for violets and some choice bunches are on the market. Most of the growers and retailers are glad of the chance to rest up after the rush and are settling down to getting things in readiness for Easter.

Various Notes.

The event of the week was the marriage of Albert F. Barbe and Mrs. Mary Gruettner. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. J. M. Cromer, at the home of the bride. Mr. Barbe, who believes in doing things right, made his greenhouses disgorge their wealth of bloom and choicest plants to do honor to the occasion. The price of rice went up and old shoes in abundance were found the next morning. Mr. and Mrs. Barbe are at home at Fifteenth and Lawndale avenue.

One of the local retailers hired a wagon one day last week and covered it with placards announcing carnations at 35 cents per dozen.

C. M. Wise, who has purchased seventy-five feet on the corner of Twenty-fifth and Holmes streets, has built a thoroughly up-to-date greenhouse 22x100, with a reception room 12x12, heated with hot water and electric lighted. He is stocking up and has plans already drawn for two more houses of the same dimensions, which he will build in a couple of weeks.

D. Freudenthal is well pleased with his new location on East Twelfth street and reports business better than in the old place.

Miss M. Dalley reports very good business the past week. She is handling some fine roses from Al. Broman, at Independence.

Ed. Bunyar, of Independence, is sending in some fine violets and finds a ready market.

Arthur Newell reports good business at both of his stores the past week and is thoroughly satisfied with the holiday business. He has his Twelfth street store very tastefully decorated.

R. S. Brown reports very fine trade these days and only bewails the fact that his place is not large enough to handle all that comes his way.

W. J. Barnes, of Thirty-eighth and Euclid, is showing some very fine stock, especially bulbous stock, and is finding a ready market for all he produces.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The opening days of 1905 have favored us with a mixture of weather which, for extreme variety, would be very hard to beat. Opening with a day of genuine April balminess, we have in quick succession blizzards, thaws, cold waves, snow storms, gales and rain storms, followed by further cold waves. One day our maximum was 55 degrees in the shade. Two days later it was 10 degrees. Minimums have varied from 42 above to 8 degrees below zero. Of sunshine we have not had an overplus and as a consequence production of flowers has not been heavy. Demand, however, has been even lighter than production and prices have softened in consequence.

Up till January 8, trade was moderately good, but a warm wave and terrific rain storm ruined what might have been a good market. Flowers were half drowned getting to market and buyers were afraid to venture out in such a storm. Conditions have improved since, but are still not so good as could be desired.

Best grades of American Beauties have realized $60 and from that figure down to $6. Brides and Maids are a little lower, about $12 for the best. The cut of these is smaller, quite a number of growers reporting their houses as off crop. Select carnations make $3 and $4, in some cases $5. A few Prosperity realized $10, while quite a number of the poorer grades went at $2, some even lower. About $1 has been top price for best violets, very few realizing $1.25. Prices have dropped to as low as 50 cents on ordinary grades.

Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths are lower and sell very slowly. Some Narcissus Soleil d'Or is seen and some very nice Golden Spur is coming in. These latter sell well. Mignonette is now coming of fine quality from several growers. Poinsettias are practically over. Freesias are coming in more freely. Cypripedium insigne remain abundant. Myosotis, marguerites and double daisies are seen here and there. Adiantum and asparagus remain about the same.

Horticultural Society.

The first 1905 meeting of the board of directors was held on January 7. It was voted to hold a second field day ere spring for a demonstration of methods for fighting the brown tail and gypsy moths, Boston Common and Franklin park being suggested as suitable locations. It was decided to change the date of the show scheduled for May 6 to April 29, all the halls having been let for the week ending May 6.

Twenty-five new members were elected, twenty-four of these being proposed by the new president, A. F. Estabrook, who has presented quite a number of additional names to be voted on in February.

The annual meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was held January 7. In the absence of the president-elect, who had been obliged to seek a warmer climate owing to the state of his health, Walter Hunnewell presided. The retiring president, Dr. H. P. Wol-

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

Gentlemen:

Enclosed find check to balance account. We found the REVIEW to bring us better results than all other trade papers combined. An adv. in your journal to us is an excellent investment. cott, made a felicitous speech, predicting greater prosperity and usefulness for the society. The greater part of the meeting was occupied by the reading of reports from the secretary, librarian and treasurer and the chairmen of committees, all of which will be printed in the transactions of the society. The treasurer's report showed assets of nearly $800,000 over liabilities. Expenditures for the past year fell a little short of $20,000. A cordial vote of thanks was passed to E. W. Wood, for over twenty years chairman of the fruit committee, who now retires.

W. A. Stevens showed a splendid dish of mushrooms, grown from pure culture spawn. Mrs. E. M. Gill had carnations, freesias and clivias. Owing to stormy weather the meeting was not so largely attended as usual.

Various Notes.

William Nicholson, of Framingham, would like all from this section who intend to go to the Chicago carnation convention to communicate with him as soon as possible, so that arrangements for berths may be made in season. The Boston delegation will probably go from the North Union station via Nickel Plate R. R. Fare will be $27.35 for the round trip, berth in through sleepers $5.50 extra each way. The party will leave on the evening of January 23. It is sincerely hoped that as large a delegation as possible will represent our section, as Boston wants the convention next year and certainly is entitled to it after a lapse of eleven years.

W. L. Lewis, of Marlboro, Mass., has had a fine vase of his new white seedling carnation, Mrs. W. L. Lewis, on exhibition in Galvin's, on Tremont street, the past week. This is a cross between Flora Hill and Mary Wood and is very promising.

J. Tailby & Son, of Wellesley, are growing some 50,000 Iris Hispanica, including a number of new and choice varieties, also a large lot of Anemone fulgens. They had blooms of the new race of Guernsey's iris in bloom for Christmas.

One of N. F. Comley's greenhouses was broken into a few nights ago and 100 carnation flowers stolen. The two thieves were caught and fined $25 and $5 respectively at Concord on the following day.

James S. Philbrick was married to Miss Lizzie Lovering at the Baptist Church, Woburn, Mass., on January 5. Mr. Philbrick's market confreres wish him much joy and excuse his late arrival at his stall.

J. Woodward Manning will be the speaker at the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on January 17. His address will be made more interesting by a number of lantern slides. The new president, James Wheeler, will be installed and refreshments served at the close of the meeting. There will be quite a number of interesting exhibits, including one or two flower novelties not previously shown in America. A large attendance is assured.

Geo. W. Ayer, of Reading, has a small batch of a very promising crimson scarlet carnation, a cross between Maceo and a yellow variety, of which he has been showing some nice blooms at the new market.

John O'Brien, for the past eight years with Carbone's flower store, has severed his connection with that firm and may decide to start on his own account a little later.

Wm. E. Glidden, of Natick, and Wm. McAlpin are acting as salesmen for the Budlong Co., at the Park street market. Wm. Malloy, head salesman for the same firm, is now able to resume his duties.

Galvin had the decorations for the first ball at the Somerset Hotel on January 4. Banks of poinsettias and palms were effective in the ballroom. Red and green was the color scheme in the palm room also. Azaleas were used in quantity and large lots of laurel wreathing and hemlock.

A pretty and effective centerpiece at a dinner on January 4, consisted of five dozen spikes of Calanthe Veitchii rising from a bed of Adiantum cuneatum, Odontoglossum crispum flowers being used as bouttonieres. Another decoration on January 9 of Lælia anceps was much admired, flowers of Dendrobium nobile virginale serving as bouttonieres.

A. H. Fewkes, of Newton Highlands, has a house of mignonette from which he is marketing some superb spikes.

Geo. E. Buxton, of Nashua, N. H., is sending some very fine lots of his new light pink seedling carnation, Marion Buxton, to the Park street market.

J. T. Butterworth is still a patient in the Framingham Hospital and his condition causes anxiety. We trust he may soon be convalescent.

A generous subscription was taken up in both the Park street and new market on January 7 for the widow of the late James Denning, who was salesman for the J. A. Budlong Co., of Providence, R. I. Mr. Denning was held in high esteem among the growers and retailers.

THE REVIEW is worth very much more than the subscription price.—F. H. LANMAN, Plymouth, Mass.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Business has been very dull during the past week and prices on nearly all lines have weakened very materially. The single exception is tea roses of good grade. For these the demand continues in excess of the supply, but this does not necessarily indicate that there is heavy buying; on the contrary, supplies are very light. There are plenty of low grade Brides and Maids and these bring cheap prices. Long Beauties have been in very large supply and if the buyer were not too critical as to age and quality he could get very cheap rates. The best stock has strengthened considerably, however, as the average quality of the cut is on the down grade because of unfavorable weather.

Compared with recent values of carnations, current prices are very low. In fact they are below the average for this season of the year and quality is generally at its very best. The market has a considerable surplus every day, principally colored sorts, for white is in good demand for funeral work. The receipts of violets are not so heavy as they were but demand has also slackened and there is considerable waste after requirements are met at low prices. Both Harrisii and callas are to be seen in most of the wholesale houses and there are large quantities of Romans and Paper Whites which are difficult to move. A few tulips are coming in but are yet of poor stem and are not largely wanted. Good mignonette is selling fairly well but there is no market for the poor stock. Stevia has shortened up and sells fairly well. The absence of active demand has made green stock quite abundant.

Receiver for Winandy.

On January 9, Dreiske & Hinners and others, through their attorneys, Felsenthal & Foreman, 100 Washington street, filed a petition in the United States Circuit Court to have Michael Winandy judged a bankrupt. Edwin C. Day, First National Bank building, was appointed receiver, and took possession Monday evening. Dreiske & Hinners are coal dealers and their claim is small in proportion to what the aggregate liabilities are said to be. Mr. Winandy, besides running his greenhouses, did a general contracting business, and it is stated that it was in this and not in the greenhouses that he lost his money, although it is well understood that the greenhouse end was doing far less than it did in its first couple of seasons in cut flowers. Mr. Winandy, although a man of exemplary character, was very lax in his business methods and kept his books in his head and his bank account in his pocket, so that neither he nor the receiver yet knows just how he stands. The claims are very large but are mostly owing to building material concerns. The assets consist of fifty-two greenhouses and several pieces of real estate. Henry Wietor, of Wietor Bros., has a mortgage for $6,000 on the greenhouse property and is secured. The receiver is continuing the business.

Not Too Many Chatenay.

Early in the season there were decidedly too many short Chatenay roses in the market and the fear was expressed that it has been overdone, but it hasn't looked that way since the first crop was off. Chatenay is a prolific bloomer and August Poehlmann says that it gives a great deal higher proportion of the fancy grade flowers than any other rose he grows. Its great value is most apparent in mid-winter.

Various Notes.

Peter Reinberg was an early buyer of the Richmond rose and placed an order for 5,000 plants, which he has now increased to 10,000. Emil Buettner and his grower were down to Hill's to look at it early this week.

Wietor Bros. have their carnation houses in very good shape. Guardian Angel is particularly productive and as a profitable variety is still well up to the front.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The week just ended was not a satisfactory one in the wholesale section. The miserable weather was a great factor, unsettling the market, depressing prices and maintaining the record of all the years for the weeks immediately succeeding the holidays, that of dullness, sacrifice and general pessimism. Violets, especially, felt the strain. Great reductions were necessary at times to distribute them and the mild days gave the sidewalk merchants their opportunity and saved the markets from utter demoralization.

The tendency all the week was downward. Snow storms up the state delaved shipments and Long Island also suffered from the drifting blizzard, the worst since the great storm of 1888. There seemed to be no limit to the carnation supply. But this is only the resting spell before renewed activity and as the year progresses the old-time enterprise and prosperity will sweep over the market and re-establish the conditions of other years. We look for a decided change for the better by the middle of the month.

Various Notes.

The Madison smoker took place on Wednesday of this week and the annual dinner of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society the samo evening. A similar coincidence occurred last year. This is one of the times when one would gladly occupy two places at the same time.

Phil Kessler has, as assistant manager of his department in the Cut Flower Exchange, Wm. C. Duncan, of Astoria, L. I.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

HERE is a dollar; the REVIEW is worth a great deal more to me.—THOS. TROUGHTON, Merrimac, Mass.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

We are passing through a period of depression, with great quantities of flowers on the street at ridiculously low prices. Carnations suffer most, with valley, Paper Whites, other bulbous flowers and violets coming next. The fakirs bought eagerly but found it extremely difficult to unload, there being little demand. People have given their presents and are not spending money now, barring a few entertainments.

The First Assembly.

Philadelphia broke away from her old traditions when the first Assembly Ball, held last Friday evening, was transferred from the Academy of Music to the new Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. The ball room is a magnificent affair, affording great opportunities for the decorators, J. J. Habermehl's Sons, to show their skill, of which they took full advantage. The stage was decorated in white, Easter lilies and lilacs being freely used. Azaleas, poinsettias, Beauties and choice specimen palms were features of the ball room and approaches, the idea being to use only the finest material and to use it in moderation. The effect was dazzlingly brilliant.

The Florists' Club.

The January meeting of the club was marred by the snow storm, which raged with the fierceness of a blizzard. The attendance was meager, even the usually reliable secretary being among the absent, and with him, unfortunately, were the books of record.

In direct contrast to the shortcomings of the home florists, two out-of-town growers braved the storm to be present. They were C. W. Ward, of Queens, Long Island, and J. L. Dillon, of Bloomsburg. The former brought some half-dozen bunches of his finest seedlings, among them Robert Craig, the famous scarlet, and a white of extraordinary size. Mr. Dillon brought a bunch of Crisis, his fine scarlet.

These notes may seem a little meager.

WHITE LAWSON

Which we introduced last season has given great satisfaction, and has proved to be

THE FINEST WHITE CARNATION EVER SENT OUT

Remember that we are headquarters for it. The demand will undoubtedly exceed the supply this season, and in order to secure early delivery, no time should be lost in placing order. We are now booking orders for early January delivery. Orders will be filled strictly in rotation, as received, so the earlier orders are booked, the earlier deliveries can be made. We can supply

First-class strong rooted cuttings, $7.00 per 100; $60.00 per 1000.

Also all the other novelties of the season, FIANCEE, CARDINAL, FRED BURKI, etc.

Also the cream of the older sorts, Mrs. M. A. Patten, Daheim, Enchantress, Flamingo, Mrs. Thos. W. Lawson, etc.

F. R. PIERSON CO., Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N. Y.

They hardly do justice to the subject, but 'tis a melancholy fact that Phil, too, was away that night, he being very much afraid that if he got into town he would have to stay there or walk all the way out.

Germantown Horticultural Society.

James G. Scott read an interesting paper, historical and humorous, on Asplenium Ebenoides, discovered by his father near Pencoyd, Pa., in 1862, before the January meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society last Monday evening. He received a hearty vote of thanks. The election of officers resulted in but one change. The society is in excellent shape, thanks to the able and conscientious work of the president, Edward Neville, and the secretary and treasurer, George Redles. Mr. Neville, who has served seven years as president, was presented with a bouquet of floral gems in the shape of fifty of the Stratford Flower Farm's selected carnations in variety.

An Average Price.

David Rust, in a paragraph published recently in the Florists' Exchange, states that a large buyer of cut flowers told him that he purchased one dozen American Beauties in Baltimore on December 24 for $30 and that on December 28, he purchased from the New York Cut Flower Co. a dozen American Beauties that were as good and probably fresher for $3.80. Commenting on this, Mr. Rust says that while the first price was too high, the second was too low and that high prices are a detriment to the cut flower business. The natural inference to be drawn from the above statement is that were the growers and sellers of cut flowers less avaricious they would be better off. Is this really true? I don't think so. Personally I would greatly prefer an average price, or at least that prices should not fluctuate so tremendously, and so, I think, would a large majority of the growers and sellers of cut flowers, but there are certain facts that prevent this desirable end.

Take the case quoted, that of American Beauties. Last season several of the cleverest growers of this rose confessed to me that they had not made money. This season prices through the fall were not as good as last season. Owing to the bad weather the supply at Christmas fell below expectations and prices were high. Despite these high prices a great many more could have been sold. I do not think the buyer referred to can realize the thought, care and hard, honest work required to bring Beauties into crop at Christmas when conditions are unfavorable. Regarding the prices quoted, the wholesale price in this city on December 24 was $15 a dozen and on December 28, $9 a dozen. The retailers' profit is a question that does not concern florists in general, but if the buyer bought "specials" in New York at $3.80 on the date given he got them fifty per cent under the listed price in that city. It is probable, however, that the buyer got "specials" in Baltimore and No. 1 or No. 2 in New York.

Various Notes.

William H. Wyatt went up to Harrisburg last week with a number of big Beauty orders for the opening of the legislature.

J. A. Smith, of the H. F. Michell Co., states that advance orders for florists' seeds are keeping the force busy.

Lit Bros., a department store, bought carnations freely on Friday, their first venture of the kind, and sold them on Saturday at 15 to 18 cents a dozen and on Monday at 10 to 12 cents a dozen.

The fakirs have been buying carnations from $2.50 to $5 a thousand and do not appear to be making money. The bad time won't last long.

William A. Walton, of Oxford, Pa., one of the Flower Market growers, has purchased a farm in that carnation center.

Eugene Bernheimer received his first freesias on Monday. He is getting a nice lot of white and pink sweet peas. Mr. Bernheimer believes that among the causes of the carnation glut are that nearly everybody's plants are doing well. Last season, when plants were less vigorous, there was no overproduction during the fortnight succeeding the holidays.

Hugh Graham had good crops of Beauties, Liberties and carnations for the holidays from his place at Logan. Mr. Graham believes the plant trade, both at Christmas and at Easter, has a great future.

Phil was fortunate to run across the senior member of the firm of the premier rose growers at the Flower Market this week. Mr. Myers was selling as his partner was ill. He stated they had cut 20,000 Beauties in December and had filled some big orders.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. is receiving some nice Kaiserins, quite a rarity now, and white lilac.

As the REVIEW goes to press J. J. Habermehl's Sons are arranging the decorations for the Morrocco Club. Lifelike goats and kids disporting themselves on miniature mountains in the center of a hollow oval table will be a feature.

M. Rice & Co. are very much elated over the fact that they were able to land a large shipment of cycas leaves before the duty was increased, which means a material increase in the price of this much used article when this lot is gone.

A Holiday Problem.

[Respectfully dedicated to K., sometime styled the Thorley of Philadelphia, and to G. C. W., a man of parts.]

The pretty girl's smile faded away
At the awful prices she had to pay
For Christmas flowers so bright and gay.
Thorley says, Thorley says.

Choice cut flowers appealed in vain;
She turned from Beauties with proud disdain,
Bought Begonia Gloire de Lorraine,
Thorley says, Thorley says.

Jerusalem cherries were soon done,
Scotty ferns had a lively run;
Of poinsettias left, there were none,
Thorley says, Thorley says.

How the storm king whistled and blew;
Plants needed wax and tissue, too;
Plenty of work for the tired crew,
Thorley says, Thorley says.

'Tis sad in this wicked world of ours,
Mischief might of evil powers
Causes strange antics in fragile flowers,
Thorley says, Thorley says.

THE SOLUTION.

In nineteen five how would it do
To fix one price the whole year through;
Abstain from salt and sugar. You
Might send the fakirs to Timbuctoo,
G. C. says, G. C. says.

Over 100 Years in the Business.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

FOR beans, $11 and $12 per bushel is asked. Rather startling prices.

THE Christmas rain at Santa Clara, Cal., was worth a great deal to the seed growers.

A GOOD strain of greenhouse radish seed is in brisk demand at Chicago at present.

IT is reported that quite a few mail orders are coming from the catalogues that have been mailed.

GEO. A. BURNETT has left Weeber & Don, New York, and will engage in business on his own account.

THE Pacific Coast growers now think they can produce a stock of radish seed equal to the best French strains.

A NEW departure is a seed catalogue issued by Sears, Roebuck & Co., large general mail order people, of Chicago.

THE maximum price at which market gardeners will buy beans freely has been exceeded in most of the current retail catalogues.

THE government's free seeds and the seedsmen's expensive catalogues are reaching a good many people in the same mail.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Joe L. Ullathorne, of the Ullathorne Seed Co., Memphis, Tenn.; Edward H. Morrison, Fairfield, Washington.

FEW seedsmen are taking advantage of the method by which catalogues may be mailed in bulk. The game doesn't appear to be worth the candle.

IT is a question in the minds of some of the leading seedsmen whether a very early or a belated issue of a retail catalogue brings the most business.

WORCESTER, MASS.—W. W. Rawson, the Boston seedsman and market gardener, will address the Worcester County Horticultural Society on February 2, subject, "Fertilizers."

THE executive committee of the Seed Trade Association was in session at Cincinnati on Tuesday of this week, making plans for the June convention on the St. Lawrence.

SAYS W. Atlee Burpee: "No one house should attempt to reach all classes of customers. So long as the world endures there will be both 'quality buyers' and 'price buyers.'"

THE Thorburn catalogue is never excelled for typographical excellence, and the one hundred and fourth annual issue, dated 1905, is up to the best of its predecessors. The cover is a model.

J. M. KIMBERLIN DEAD.

James Monroe Kimberlin, head of the important seed growing firm of J. M. Kimberlin & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., passed away December 26, after an illness of two years, the result of a stroke of paralysis. A second attack seized him on December 22, after which he was conscious except for an interval just before his death, but unable to talk. L. M. Kimberlin, a son, was on a trip among the trade in the east and was reached by wire at Kansas City. He arrived home twenty-four hours after his father passed away. The funeral was held December 28, many California seed growers attending.

Mr. Kimberlin was born in Virginia January 20, 1828. He graduated with honors from Dickinson College, and at the age of 24 married and removed to California, journeying by the Isthmus. Mr. Kimberlin became an instructor in the San Jose Academy, and later was professor of languages in the University of the Pacific, at that time located at Santa Clara. Forty years ago he found it necessary to seek outdoor occupation and turned to the then unexplored business of seed growing. To him may justly be given credit for blazing the trail which has now been widened to a great highway, It was a slow matter to build up confidence in the east, not so much in the grower as in the seeds resulting under Californian conditions, but that problem solved, the business has developed steadily until today thousands of acres in Santa Clara and Kern counties are producing seeds to be sent out under the Kimberlin label. Their crops cover the whole range of items for which California is looked to as the main source of supply. Onions, lettuces and sweet peas are the principal acreages.

Mr. and Mrs. Kimberlin had nine children, two of whom have passed away. Three sons, C. R., L. M. and H. V. Kimberlin, are associated with the business, and, indeed, it has been practically in their charge for several years. They will continue it without change of policy.

By a decree of fate, Mr. Kimberlin passed away on the first anniversary of the day his companion on fifty-one years' of life's journey was laid at rest in the churchyard where both now sleep.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

E. J. LEWIS, Cresco, Ia., has bought a ten-acre tract, and will start a nursery.

H. A. TERRY, Crescent, Ia., states in his 1905 price list that he has been raising seedling peonies for thirty-four years.

W. R. CARR, nurseryman, Yellow Springs, O., has filed a petition in bankruptcy, scheduling liabilities of $30,000 and no assets.

THE Wisconsin State Horticultural Society will hold its annual convention at Madison, February 7 to 11. There is an interesting program.

N. W. HALE, nurseryman and congressman, presided at a meeting at Nashville, January 2, at which the Tennessee State Horticultural Society was organized.

JACKSON & PERKINS CO., Newark, N. Y., state that the demand for Manetti stocks has been so great that their importation has been entirely engaged for some time.

THE American Association of Park Superintendents has issued a bulletin dealing exhaustively and authoritatively with the building and maintenance of park roads and walks.

THE entomologist of the state of Minnesota is preparing a preliminary report on experiments to control the leaf hopper, which is reported to have done considerable damage in nurseries. The entomological officer is very frequently called upon in Minnesota, having received more than 1,000 inquiries with regard to the identity and methods of controlling insect pests during the past year.

THE Chicago Branch of the Woman's Outdoor Art League of the American Civic Association will apply for a divorce from the parent body, and one of the reasons alleged is that J. Horace McFarland, president of the Civic Association, "wanted us to plant fruit trees in the streets of Chicago, and we thought it was about time to call a halt." Another reason is that three-fourths of the dues go to support "higher" organizations and all that comes back is such advice as that quoted above.

ST. LOUIS.

The business among the local retail florists since New Year's has been very quiet and had it not been for a lot of funeral work it could have been called very dull. The social folks are as yet not inclined to give any large "doings," as usual, at this time of the year. Some of the large establishments up town report that they have a few orders booked ahead for the latter part of this month.

Values in the flower market, which have been holding up with a remarkable persistency, have dropped off greatly the past week on all grades, and especially on violets, which can now be bought as low as 50 cents per hundred. There is no glut as yet, but everything is plentiful.

Roses of the extra fancy grade are not any too many for the demand, but the lesser grades in Brides, Maids, Golden Gates, Meteors and Perles are more than enough. In carnations the stock is of extra good quality in all varieties. Prices on fancy are down to 5 cents. The grades behind these run from $1.50 to $3 per hundred. Whites are in big demand. Colored stock is left over each morning in large lots.

In bulbous material our market is greatly overstocked in almost everything in season. A fine lot of Harrisii are coming in now and are down to $12.50 per hundred. Callas are scarce, Romans and Paper Whites very plentiful. Violets have fallen off in demand and the market has had an oversupply the past week in California. Greens in smilax and asparagus sold fairly well.

Will Hucke is back in harness again in Belleville and is sending F. M. Ellis a fine lot of asparagus, which sells well.

Mrs. Buechel, of the Riessen Floral Co., reports that Mr. Buechel will not be able to attend to business until spring, as his broken limb is mending slowly. They have been very busy since the holidays.

Charles Schoenelle of the Ayers Floral Co., is making a collection for the benefit of the family of the late Pat Quinn, who are in need. Subscriptions will be received by any of our wholesalers.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, spent a day with the trade the past week. He reports trade very satisfactory among the florists in Belleville. Carl Beyer and Frank Ellis were with him in at the windup.

It will probably be news to the florists outside of St. Louis who visited the World's Fair and the famous Tyrolean Alps that the little flower girl, Miss Clotilde Jiricka, was married on Christmas eve to Kenneth H. Bailey, the millionaire china merchant of London, England. They are now on their way across the waters, to the home of the bridegroom. Miss Jiricka was a St. Louis girl and presided the whole season at the flower stand in the Tyrolean Alps, World's Fair grounds.

Visitors in town were: George M. Kellogg, who spent Sunday here, leaving that night for Jefferson City to attend the inauguration of Governor Folk; Judge Vesey, of Fort Wayne, who spent Monday as the guest of Fred Meinhardt; Henry Johann, of Collinsville, who reports sale of part of his land to a coal company.

St. Louis Seed Co., Schisler-Corneli Seed Co. and the Plant Seed Co. are making extensive preparations for a big seed trade this spring. J. J. B.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Christmas was at least twenty per cent better than last year. Plants, cut flowers and greens sold equally well. The stores were finely decorated. Azaleas, lilies, cyclamens, primroses, etc., were much in evidence. G. Van Bochove & Bro. had a very handsome display, and so did the Central Michigan Nursery's store. One window was decorated with a winter landscape. The other was devoted to pot plants. The Dunkley Floral Co. had some designs made up in New York style and also showed pot plants. New Year's trade was also very good and demand is good all around. H. M.

THOMPSONVILLE, CONN.

Chester F. Brainard, who for the past six years has been in the employ of his brother, D. Wm. Brainard, has purchased from F. N. Allen a tract of about ten acres of land known as the J. B. Allen farm. The land is on the main trolley line between Hartford and Springfield, in the north end of the village of Thompsonville. Mr. Brainard expects to start into the nursery, plant and bulb business this coming spring, though it is his plan to work into the wholesale florist's business as well. Operations will be commenced as soon as possible in the spring and some building will be done this season.

RICHMOND, IND.—Chas. Knopf, of the B. K. & B. Floral Co., has the sympathy of many friends in the recent death of his mother.

CANTON, O.—Fire destroyed stock valued at $2,000 belonging to Chas. Lindacher, December 29. Mr. Lindacher refused money to a tramp and thinks the tramp set fire to the greenhouse.

When Writing Advertisers.

PACIFIC COAST.

Frank Shibeley, of San Francisco, reports holiday business as very good and fully up to that of former years. Cut poinsettias were in big demand for Christmas and a great many were disposed of, customers in many cases purchasing these instead of roses. He says that trade was a little dull the early part of the winter, due to the fact that an unusually large number of wealthy patrons were in Europe and the eastern cities, but thinks it will now improve. Violets are very popular for street wear and demand in consequence is large. Street venders are disposing of great quantities daily. There is very little call for American Beauties, Bridesmaid being the favorite rose.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Now that the holidays are over the growers and retailers can take a little time and figure out how they stand. I have spoken with a great many of both and there seems to be some difference of opinion as to how well the receipts balance the expenditures. I think, however, on the whole proposition there were more flowers handled than last year, but the price was somewhat cheaper, probably fully twenty per cent. Another thing to consider is that, except for a few fancy roses, there was no shortage in the supply of general stock. This is the first year that such a condition has been apparent in San Francisco and whether it was due to the extended warm spell we had in the early winter or to the increased number of houses that have been built during the past season and are producing flowers for the first time, I am not quite sure, but both these conditions assisted in the increased supply. What we are going to do with the spring's surplus I have no idea, but it is certain we will have our hands full.

Since the holidays trade has been fair, funeral work being the principal item. Carnations, which were held at somewhat stiff prices last week, are gradually getting a little cheaper and more plentiful. Roses, only, are in short supply and the price has remained the same as they have been for several weeks. Daffodils are coming into market in fair quantities and narcissi of all descriptions remain a drug. Violets remain at $1 per dozen bunches, valley moves very slowly since the holidays and Roman hyacinths are not much better. A few freesias are seen, but it will be several weeks before they are in their prime.

Various Notes.

The Art Floral Co. have opened a store on Powell street, in the Flood building. They have a strictly up-to-date store and will handle only first-class stock.

The retailers report that hyacinth and tulip bulbs were of poor sale last fall and many of them still have considerable stock on hand.

The Loomis carnation growers are shipping large quantities of rooted carnations to the local growers.

A. Galloway, of Fruitvale, is cutting some extra fine Estelle at present.

ANNUALS.

For dealers who handle soft wooded stock such as stocks, asters, salvias, petunias, verbenas, etc., it is now time that seed should be sown. It is not necessary with this class of annuals to have any bottom heat, but it is well in this latitude, to plant seeds in frames and cover with glass until the middle of February.

We have had a very mild season thus far and geraniums, lobelia, achyranthes, alternantheras, begonias and plants of that nature that were planted as cuttings in November should now be rooted and ready to transplant in flats. There are no precautions that are necessary at this time except to be particular that the cuttings are not overwatered and that they are protected at night from a possible frost.

Because of our exceptionally mild winter even the heliotropes and geraniums are still in full bloom outdoors, so that there has been little trouble to get cuttings for spring stock.

Regarding annuals grown from seed, the gardener wants to bear in mind that our demand for them is principally from the middle of March until the end of April and stock that is offered for sale after that generally is consigned to the rubbish heap. I have found there is an increasing demand for asters, cosmos, salvias, stock, cereopsis, gaillardias, lobelias and hollyhocks and such stock that is grown from seed, usually pansies, hollyhocks, canterbury bells and snapdragons planted early last fall should now be pricked into flats or planted in the ground for spring flowering.

Carnation cuttings under glass are now well rooted and can be planted in the open ground about the middle of March. Some growers shift them from the cutting bed into thumb pots and others transplant into flats before they are shifted outside. This is an advantage if they are extra strong growing sorts, or if the grower is backward in having his ground ready for them. They are easily stunted in flats and to have the best results should be kept growing without experiencing any check. This rule applies to all soft-wooded stock, as thrifty, well-grown plants pay well for the extra trouble they cause when offered for sale. G.

EUONYMUS RADICANS.

I have some plants of which I cannot learn the names. Enclosed find a leaf of each. Will you please give names of same through the REVIEW? The variegated leaf comes from a hard-wooded bush, while the other two are faster growth. C. F. M.

These leaves, when they reached me were so badly shriveled that with one exception I was unable to identify them. Sending such soft leaves in a letter is very unsatisfactory, as they are usually destroyed beyond recognition in transit. The leaf with the yellow blotch is Euonymus radicans variegata, one of the forms of Euonymus Japonica. R.

CYPRESS.

Cypress stocks at Louisiana mills are in good shape to meet a large demand and manufacturers are expecting a good run of business during the coming year. In the Kansas City district there has been a satisfactory trade in cypress all the past season, and disposition of product throughout the country has been sufficient to show the high appreciation in which the wood is held.—American Lumberman.

HERE IS A MONEY-MAKER

New Late Pink Chrysanthemum, Freeda Senner. This Chrysantbemum we have grown three years. It is a very profitable variety on account of it being so very late; begins blooming December 20, continuing to middle of January; color, salmon pink; large and full; strong grower, three to four feet, foliage dark green leaves, well up to bloom, and a good keeper. On account of its lateness, it is bound to be exceedingly valuable.

We will book orders for March delivery, strong rooted cuttings, 10c; $9.00 per 100. Write for estimates on larger lots.

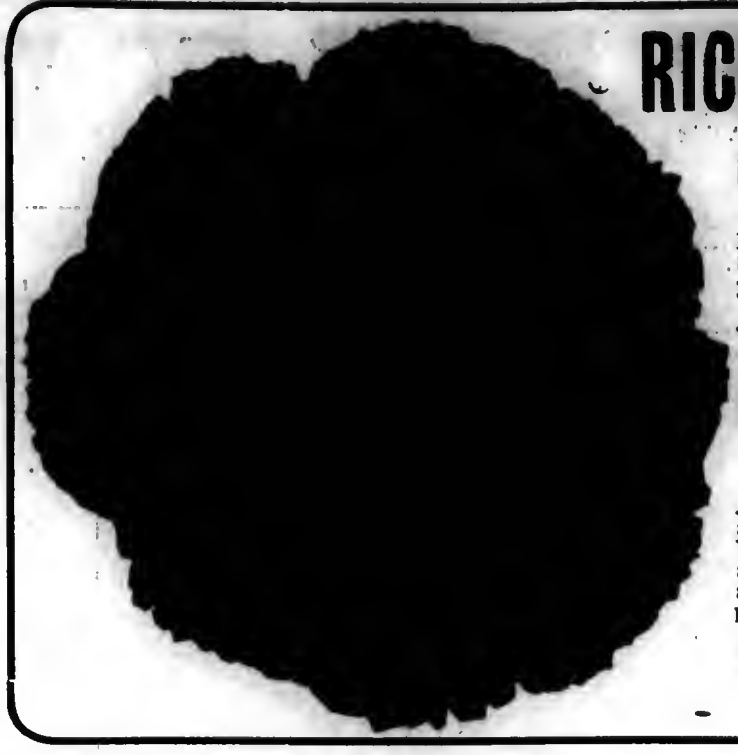
ASPHALTUM ON PIPES.

I have three greenhouses used for a general stock of cut flowers and bedding plants in which the hot water pipes have been painted with asphaltum. The fumes given off are ruining the stock, the roses in particular. I have tried running a heavy fire and throwing the ventilators wide open; have also used a gasoline torch and tried sand paper. Can you tell me how to get the paint off without losing any more stock?

C. J. R.



I regret to say I know of no way of removing this paint that will not be deleterious to the pipes and injurious to the plants. It is likely that strong ammonia water would be as effective in removing the paint as anything that could be used as a wash. It is possible that a strong lye wash might be of some use. I do not think that either of these would hurt the pipes to speak of and would probably not injure the plants. Any acid which might be used would injure the pipe seriously.

It is a great mistake to paint pipes intended for heating purposes. In some cases it is economy to paint flow pipes that are not considered in estimating the radiation for a house, or where appearance is a factor, but where efficiency and economy are elements in the financial management of a place do not paint the pipes.

RED SPORT (Of Maceo.)

This new "Bread and Butter" commercial brilliant "Crane" Red Carnation, now in its fourth year, has the hardy constitution of General Maceo, with a stronger heavier growth, longer and stiffer stem and a larger flower. Growing under the same conditions and in the same house with Flamingo and Estelle it has produced four times as many blooms as the former and twice as many blooms as the latter. The color is as good as Estelle and the bloom brings as much as does Estelle at its best. Every flower is of a uniform brilliant red, perfectly double with an ideal calyx, in fact we never saw a split one.

Red Sport is perfectly healthy, an easy variety to grow, an early and continuous bloomer, throwing its heaviest cuts around the Christmas holidays and during the Winter months when red is in demand. Red Sport will keep longer and travel farther than any other red carnation, and will prove a bonanza to the grower who does a shipping business. If the scarcity of reds in the market that now exists continues Red Sport will pay better to the square foot of bench than any other variety of any color to date. Every florist who has seen Red Sport growing has placed an order for rooted cuttings, which tells the tale. All our stock is sold up to January 25th. Orders filled in strict rotation from that date on. Price, 12 for $1.50, 25 for $2.50, 50 for $4.00 all post paid. $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000, by express. We guarantee all cuttings to be well rooted and to arrive in good condition.

CARNATIONS

Rooted Cuttings Now Ready.

Eclipse Our 1905 introduction. A pink carnation, lighter in color than Lawson and of a more even and bright shade of pink. No objectionable shading or bleachings. A strong free growth, large flowers on long stiff stems and early and continuous flowering.

Fiancee A most pleasing shade of medium pink. No carnation has ever equalled the number of awards received by this variety.

Cardinal Brilliant Scarlet. A great improvement over Estelle.

F. Burki Pure white. The above four varieties, $12 per 100; $100 per 1000.

Richmond Gem Scarlet, $10.00 per 100; $75 00 per 1000.

Lady Bountiful and The Belle The two best commercial white carnations of the present day. Both have received honors over competitors at the fall exhibitions. We have large stocks of these two varieties which are already in great demand. Do not delay in placing your order for early delivery. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000; $112.50 per 2500.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

A trip to the various stores found a tired looking lot, after the holiday rush, but I am pleased to say that all wore a pleasant smile and were in quite a cheerful mood, which augurs well for the business transacted. At New Year's, while not a wonderful holiday for florists, I can say with utmost confidence a magnificent trade was done. The market, with the exception of white stock, was cleaned out completely and many more good colored roses and carnations could have been disposed of. Christmas prices ruled in most lines, but since have taken a decided drop.

There were many receptions, balls and debutantes' parties between the holidays, which kept the retailers on the jump. They were divided between the J. M. Gasser Co., Collins & Harrison and Smith & Fetters.

Business since New Year's has been about normal with plenty of stock to go around, there being no overplus to speak of, as most growers are very much off crop at present.

Various Notes.

Robert Kegg, of Rocky River, is sending in some nice Lawson and Manley carnations to the Cleveland Cut Flower Co.

The Ohio Floral Co. is cutting very fine Enchantress carnations.

Herman Hart had a magnificent lot of good stock for the holidays, which he readily disposed of at retail. The new carnation range was in full crop of very fine blooms, which reflects great credit upon the grower. The plant is a model of neatness and is up-to-date in all respects. Next season the old range will be replaced by a new one with a beautiful store front to handle the increasing business.

At a meeting of the Florists' Club recently it was decided to hold a carnation show on a small scale on January 23. All local growers will make a display, as well as some of the big fellows. A notice will be sent out and a fine attendance should result.

L. C. Hecock, of Elyria, reports a fine trade for the holidays.

W. L. Jones, of Lorain, says he could have disposed of twice the quantity of flowers.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

W. L. Lewis, Marlboro, Mass., registers Carnation Mrs. W. L. Lewis, color pure snow white; flower well built, on a long stiff stem, and will produce more flowers per square foot than any other white in existence today; the flowers measure three inches, are good keepers and shippers, and a burst calyx is something that has never been seen to exist since its origin.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, Ind., register Carnation Beatrice. In registering this variety last week the color was described as "lighter" than Daybreak, it should have read brighter than Daybreak.

The premium lists for the Chicago meeting January 25 and 26 have been sent to every member of the society. If yours has not reached you, you should notify the secretary at once. If you are not a member and want one, they can be had on application.

H. Weber & Sons, of Oakland, Md., desire to have it announced that the premiums they offer for the vase each of Norway, Gov. Lowndes and G. Lord scoring the highest number of points will be awarded to a vase in any of the classes calling for fifty or more blooms, and need not be made a separate entry.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

What a Few Say, All That Use It Say.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—I received the sample of your Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder but as I did not use but one-half the amount as directed I did not obtain the best results but am satisfied that if used according to direction it will kill everything it is intended for, as at least 90 per cent of Thrips and Aphis were destroyed this morning. Send 200 lbs. Emil Fredrich.

Waynesboro, Pa.—We have not only found The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder the most valuable greenfly destroyer but we also use it to kill snails by sprinkling it on the ground. Sure death; they look in the morning like small oysters rolled in cracker dust. H. EICHHOLZ.

West Whiteland, Pa.—We have tried many fumigants but have found nothing in the market so effectual and easily used as The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder. Your prices are reasonable for so good an article. J. LEHMAN MAULL, Pres.

Purcellville, Va.—We have given The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder a thorough trial on Carnations, and we are well pleased with the result. We are able to keep the plants entirely clean. A. B DAVIS & SON.

A FREE trial five-pound bag will cost you nothing more than the express charges on it. The trial bag will prove our assertion that it is the most effective, cleanest and quickest as well as the cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with. All aphis killed in one night—our booklet tells of it; we mail one on request.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

A plan that is on foot to extend the field of instruction at the Rhode Island College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts to embrace practical work in the establishment, maintenance and management of greenhouses, has met the unqualified support of florists in the state, and in all probability some action will be taken at this session of the General Assembly with the view of securing an appropriation of $15,000 for a greenhouse at the college in the near future.

At a conference between representatives of the board of managers and the faculty of the State Agricultural College and representative greenhouse men of Providence and vicinity, the plan was thoroughly considered, and all present expressed themselves as heartily in favor of the step.

Those present at the conference were: William Appleton, William E. Chappell, Matthew Macnair, Farquhar Macrae, John Macrae, Michael Sweeney, John T. Brown, all of Providence; Benjamin Martin, East Providence; Cody N. Potter, Auburn, and Mr. Paine.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.

A strange and sad fatality has followed the family of Gustav Obermeyer. It was only a short time ago that the eldest son died of diphtheria and on January 5, Fritz, aged 6 years, succumbed to the same disease. On the following day an employe named Paul Hannamann died of typhoid in the Obermeyer home, where two other children are very ill with diphtheria. Hannamann came to Mr. Obermeyer only a short time ago, a penniless stranger. He was evidently well educated but in need and Mr. Obermeyer took him in and gave him work. Nothing is known of him save that his parents reside in Mecklenburg, Germany.

Superior Boilers are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, TREANOR & RETTIG.

OCEANIC, N. J.

The Monmouth County Horticultural Society installed officers at its regular meeting, January 6. Charles Wengerter and James Barron were elected to membership. H. A. Kettel exhibited three vases of tulips, which received ninety points; one vase of freesias, scoring ninety; one vase of lily of the valley, ninety. George Kuhn exhibited some violets which received eighty points. Geo. H. Hale exhibited a vase of Euphorbia Jacquinæflora, which scored ninety-five points. Mr. Hale grows it at the end of a house in a bench, treating it the same as the roses. Its beautiful sprays, with the stems, can be cut six feet long, which makes it useful to the florists for decorative purposes. It is seldom seen in this country, but it is grown on the other side. Mr. Wm. Turner showed some cauliflower which scored ninety-five points.

Speakers were the retiring president, Wm. Turner, President Hale, Vice-president Williams, Financial Secretary Kuhn, N. Butterbach, and W. N. Campbell. The judges of the evening were A. J. Williams, John A. Kennedy and John Yeomans.

WHO HAS IT?

C. E. Hubbard, seedsman and hardware dealer, Topeka, Kan., wants to buy 700 of the "metal strips that lie between the glass when the panes are lapped and make the joints air tight as well as making the roof much stronger." He wants them for 16-inch glass and, while we should not wish to recommend the device, should be glad to have some one tell Mr. Hubbard where he can be supplied.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Re-awakening.

I am still a week or two behind the date with my reminders, but I shall, I trust, soon catch up. The passing of Christmas and New Year's is a transformation scene, or it should be. New crops are started up, yet some thought must be given to those things that you want for propagating or those worth carrying over for another year.

The Poinsettia's Popularity.

It is remarkable to read from almost every city that the poinsettia was a leading or, in a few cities, the leading plant. Of course, it is the color that has brought it to the front. I consider it one of the most profitable plants we grow, one of the few that there is really a good margin of profit in. For future stock, strong canes in 6-inch pots that you have not cut too low are the best material. Just lay them down beneath a bench where the ground is dry; let them get perfectly dry and that will ripen the wood. Let them rest there until the first of May. If you have only plants that you grew planted out on a bench, then lift them with all the roots, pack them in shallow boxes in moist soil and treat the same way. To pull these up ruthlessly and cover their roots with dry soil would be too radical a change for them.

The Useful Old Stevia.

The useful old Stevia serrata was just as indispensable this Christmas as ever. One winter we had none, simply because no thought was given to cutting down half a dozen plants to within six inches of the pot and standing them in some light, cool corner. That is all there is to do now. In March they will give you all the cuttings you want.

You are sure to have some azaleas left over. They did not all flower freely enough. Simon Mardner and Deutsche Perle force so finely that they all went freely. We tried a few Van der Cruyssen but got them in hardly in time, yet they flower so freely that they sell at any time. Any plants of any variety that are unsalable, if they have made lots of young growth, need only the strongest growth pinched back, which will break later and make more growths. Put them in a night temperature of 45 degrees. You don't want active growth yet a while. Be sure to pick all old flowers off, seed pod and all.

We find there is a constant complaint from good customers that their "azalea, so lovely when received, is all wilted." It is nothing but want of sufficient water. So this year we had a small cloth label printed and fastened to every azalea we sent out. It read something like this: "Azalea. This plant needs a daily and thorough watering." Ten years ago I intended to get up a little label with instructions for the care of all the leading plants that we sell for the dwelling house. It was a real good intention, but, like millions of others, was never fulfilled. They say a certain unspeakable place is paved with them.

Holding Azaleas for Easter.

Look out for your Easter azaleas, particularly the newly imported stock. April 23 is a long way off and now is a better time to do the retarding than in April. Some years ago Easter came on April 25 and most of our azaleas were too early by three weeks. When about in full bloom we put a lot of them in the basement of our house. It was not a success. The colored varieties lost their bright color and they all lacked freshness of flower and foliage. So keep them cool now. If you can do it, a few degrees above the freezing point is all they want. If a few plants show by the size of the bud that they cannot be held back, why, let them flower in a moderate temperature.

The Lorraine Begonia.

There were a great number of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine sold in our city, and in nearly every other city. I cannot believe that any florist can say it is a good house plant, but no matter; it is so beautiful and its attractiveness will last at least three times as long as a bunch of roses or carnations, so there is little danger of the demand decreasing unless some clever hybridizer gives us something better.

There is a very successful grower of this beautiful plant in our town and I am not above looking at his operations and asking questions. Plants that are left over, or will be past their beauty in a few weeks, can be put on a bench where conditions are on the dry side. They will need little water; just enough to keep them from shriveling. In May these plants can be cut down and will shortly send up a number of young shoots that have no inclination to flower. These vigorous young shoots will root readily and, if kept growing and given careful watering (a great point in their culture), will make nice plants in 5-inch or even 6-inch pots the following winter.

The largest number of these begonias are, however, grown from leaf cuttings, which are put into the sand in September and October and are now in 2-inch pots. If they are showing three or four little growths above the soil you are all solid for fine plants next Christmas. These little plants can be kept decidedly on the dry side until May or June, when, with increased heat and a little more moisture, they begin to start into growth and from then on it is a matter of shifting and careful watering. They do not want wet foliage at any time. When growing fast, say in September and October, you might manage to water them with the hose, but no plants pay better for careful watering with the can, for one may need it and the next plant may not, and it takes an artist to do that with a hose. If you have none of these little 2-inch plants now is the time to buy.

Crimson Ramblers.

It may be a little late for starting the Crimson Ramblers that were lifted from the ground last November, but it is a good time now to start those grown in pots last summer. Just a word about those lifted plants. The forcing must be very slow for the first three or four weeks and the heat given them slowly and carefully increased. They will not have any working roots and to put them into a strong heat would ruin them. Root growth and leaf growth, or rather the swelling of the eyes, would go on together. Spraying at least two or three times a day is most essential.

The plants grown in pots all summer, the care of which was attended to last summer, need no such skillful management. These might be forced into flower easily in less than eleven or twelve weeks, but a Rambler that has never been subjected to a night temperature of over 55 degrees is much superior to one that you had to hurry in 65 degrees. If you have three good canes six or seven feet long you have the material for making a most attractive plant, and even two such canes will do. If started in 45 degrees that will do until they are in leaf, and then raise them to 55 degrees.

They should at once, when brought into the houses, be tied down. Put three or four neat bamboo canes firmly into the soil around the edge of the pot and of a length of thirty inches or three feet above the pot. Tie the growths spirally around the stakes. You will have an even break of all the eyes and flowers and foliage from bottom to top of plant.

A week or two after starting, scrape off an inch of the surface of the soil and mulch heavily with rather fresh cow manure. We never found anything more necessary, yet liquid manure, after the clusters of buds were showing, would doubtless be of benefit, as the pots are crowded with roots.

We have never grown these roses in larger than 7-inch pots and that will grow a plant as large as our trade demands.

Hybrid Perpetual Roses.

The hybrid perpetual roses are seldom forced except from plants that are lifted from the ground in November. Some growers lift them and heel them in without potting, deferring that until they start them. Others pot at once when lifting. I think the latter much the better plan, although it may not be the cheapest. Either way they will have made no roots and root and top growth will go on together. Start cool and gradually increase the heat. If they can be flowered in 55 degrees the flowers will be perfect. It should be needless to say that spraying should be frequent from the day they are brought in until the blossoms are expanded. All deciduous shrubs enjoy a spraying when their buds are feeling the influence of heat and the rising sap. Look at our deciduous trees and shrubs. If spring starts in dry, if even warm, the foliage is slow to appear; then notice the transformation scene after a heavy shower.

Forcing Dahlias.

Last year was our first trial at forcing dahlias. We obtained the dormant roots from a well known eastern specialist, asking for only five or six best forcing varieties. The writer has never had the opportunity to see how other people forced them and there may be better methods. We planted them two feet apart, about the middle of January, in six inches of well manured, rather light loam. The bed was right on the ground, without any drainage, but dry. The temperature was about 55 degrees. The first flowers were cut about April 10 and from then on in increased quantity until July. They sold well and it is a cut and come again crop. We proved they were an excellent paying crop, simple to manage and yielding a great lot of bloom. I am not posted as to varieties. Let them be singles and pompons and limited to few sorts. The beautiful single Twentieth Century should certainly be one of them.

Verbenas.

If you grow that sweet, old-fashioned flower, the verbena, sow the seed at once and you can get a cutting off the young plants in April. Seedlings are much more vigorous and free of disease than those propagated from old plants in the fall.

GRAFTED ROSES FOR FORCING

Appliances for Grafting.

The appliances necessary for this are few and very simple. In the first place there should be seats for the operators to sit on, low enough so that the feet may be placed firmly on the ground and the knees brought up to within a comfortable working distance from the body. In front of the sitters ought to be a bench a foot or so higher than the seats, on which may be placed the scions and stocks. Flats to carry the stocks are very convenient if made to hold just an even thirty-two 2½-inch pots. Raffia, which is the best material for tying, should be slightly damp and cut in bunches to the proper length. A good sharp knife—shoe knives which can be bought for 15 cents are first-class for this work—and a layer of wet sphagnum moss on the bench, to lay the cut scions on, complete the equipment.

Size and Stage.

The stocks should be chosen as near the size of the scions as possible and, although a stock larger than the scion is not objectionable, the reverse would be very much so.

The proper stage to use a stock is when it has started to root in the pots and positively never before. It is generally safe to graft when the buds just begin to start, as this is usually a sign, if the plants have not been kept too warm, that root action has started. Speaking broadly, then, the time limit should be not before the buds start and not after the shoots have grown to half an inch. I do not by any means want to insinuate that the operation cannot be performed at other stages, but it can be done best within the limits laid down.

The scion ought to be good firm wood with a plump bud, but at any rate not started over a quarter of an inch. Where the shoot is over this length it will generally rot off in the case and so make it necessary for the scion to form new eyes, which it will sometimes do, but more often it causes the scion to rot also. The leaves should be trimmed somewhat closer than for cuttings, as this lessens the opportunity for damping off. As for the number of eyes to leave, one is all that is necessary, but if the wood is close-jointed two are not objectionable and, indeed, some prefer this latter as it gives a chance to get one eye under ground when planting.

The Kind of Union.

Now in regard to the kind of union to make, there are only two that are worthy of much consideration. One is generally known as the whip, and the other I shall designate for the purpose of description as a modified form of whip grafting. The first is formed by making an oblique cut from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in length, according to the size of the stock, and cutting the scion to match the same, placing the cut surfaces together and securing firmly with raffia. The points to make sure of are that at least one side and the bottom cut of the scion are so placed that the cambium cells, the layer of cells between the bark and the wood, are in perfect contact with the corresponding cells in the stock; that in no case must the pith either in the stock or in the scion be left exposed, because while exposed wood cells will callus over, the pith will not.

A House of Manetti Stocks Potted and Awaiting the Right Stage of Growth for Grafting.

Grafting Roses at the Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, Mass.

Making the Graft.

It is a good plan to have two knives, one for stocks and one for scions, and to cut a batch of scions before starting to graft; they will keep for some time if kept sprinkled on sphagnum. If the benches have been built as described, a person sitting on the lower one and facing the table will be in the proper position for quick work.

Place the pot containing the stock between the knees, steady with the left hand, make a clean, oblique upward cut and hold facing up; without laying down the knife pick out a suitable size scion and hold it on the stock with the forefinger and thumb of the left hand, always matching at least the bottom and side toward the operator. Grasp a piece of raffia which has been cut previously to the proper length; insert one end between the forefinger and second finger. Wind carefully and firmly, beginning always at the top and not winding too closely together, as close winding gives a chance for moisture to collect beneath the raffia and causes rotting of the scion.

The neatest way to make the tie is to pass the free end through beneath the last twist of the raffia and draw tight. The plants should not be allowed to stand around too long, as the green scion will shrivel up.

There are, of course, many ways that grafting can be done, but if the beginner will carry out carefully the details mentioned, with the assurance that he is on the right track, he will rapidly become expert and conclude that, after all, there was considerably more talk about it than there was work.

The Test of Watchfulness.

Now if anyone thinks that after he has performed all of the foregoing instructions his labors are over he surely is making a great mistake, for although everything up to this stage must be done with care, the real test of his watchfulness comes after the grafts are placed in the case.

For the first four or five days after the plants are put in the case, if the bottom, whether it be ashes or sand, has been properly moistened it will not be necessary to open the case. But this rule will not always hold good, because the novice will be perhaps very likely to have either too much or too little moisture. If too wet the leaves will become saturated with moisture and both leaves and stems will begin to blacken and rot. This latter condition is generally a sure sign that the temperature is too high or else the case is too wet; this, however, would not hold good for weak or soft scions, because they would be likely to rot with even the best treatment.

The only thing to do, then, if the case is too wet is to raise the sash very slightly; the thickness of a lath is plenty, even if the plants have been in only two days. This will give a chance for the air to circulate and will likely carry out the surplus moisture. Watch results carefully and if any leaves show the least sign of drooping, close the case at once. At any rate five to ten minutes twice a day ought to be sufficient to accomplish the purpose.

On the other hand, if the case is too dry the remedy is obvious; damp very slightly with a fine mist. Mist is what is meant as it describes exactly what is wanted; and keep the case tight.

Airing the Plants.

After five or six days, then, provided everything has gone right, the callus should be far enough advanced to allow of admitting air. This should be done, to start with, not over fifteen to twenty minutes morning and afternoon, and gradually increased each succeeding day until the sash can be kept up all day. It is advisable to close the case for the first night or so after a full day of airing; then for three or four nights following leave on some air, about half that of the daytime, until finally, in from fifteen to twenty days, the plants will be able to stand full air day and night; and in from twenty to thirty days they should be hard enough to take out, but even then they will require shading from the strong sun for a few days.

It is taken for granted that even the novice will know that he must keep the pots properly watered, neither too wet nor too dry, rather dry than wet, for obvious reasons; but it will be well perhaps to tell him that, from the time the plants begin to take air for the full day, they ought to be damped overhead twice a day with a very fine spray, until they are removed from the case and have become thoroughly hardened. Of course, neither minutes nor days can be an exact guide, but are mentioned only in order to give an approximate idea of the time usually required. The best guides, and in fact the only ones a person will probably depend on after he has had some practice, are his eyes.

To sum up in a nutshell, the most common causes of failure in the grafting case are: First, shriveling, due to too dry an atmosphere, either through improper airing or a poorly built structure, allowing air to get in through the cracks; and, second, damping or rotting off, due to not enough ventilation, or else too moist an atmosphere.

THRIPS ON ROSES.

These pests, when once they effect an entrance into a rose house, particularly where Beauties are the crop, can if neglected cause considerable trouble, chagrin and loss. For the past few years it has seemed next to impossible to keep such crops free from their ravages and it looks as if they were ever on the increase in spite of all the efforts made to subdue them. Along with our native species we have to contend with a few imported varieties which are equally destructive and quite as hard to get rid of as their native congeners.

As a means of preventing their entrance into the greenhouse great care should be exercised in keeping sod and manure piles from being overrun with weeds during the summer months, as these are their favorite breeding places. They are especially to be found among tall-growing weeds and these should be kept in check in the vicinity of the houses, either by being cut down or by being burned during a dry spell.

To prevent their increase in the house frequent and light fumigation is necessary rather than heavy doses, which would be certain to destroy the color of the blooms. If the fumes can be made to reach these insects they are certain to be destroyed, but this is where the trouble commences, for, being very active and quick in their movement, they seek cover when the nrst scent of the fumes reaches them. They succumb quickly to the ordinary tobacco fumes and as they prefer to fed mostly after dark, when they leave their seclusion among the mulch or rough surface soil and ascend to the blooms to feed, they are much easier destroyed if this operation is performed after darkness has set in.

If they become too plentiful and a too frequent fumigation is bleaching the blooms, cayenne pepper can be used and if this is employed in the following manner they are certain to disappear, not all in one night, as the broods are being hatched continually, but by persisting in its use twice a week there will be few visible in two or three weeks.

Heat some iron plates or ordinary bricks till they are nearly red and place them in the paths at distances of twenty or thirty feet apart. Then start at the farthest end of the house and put a tablespoonful of the pepper on each plate or brick. Do this quickly and keep moving toward the door, as these fumes are disagreeable or even dangerous. Close the house tightly and let it remain so till morning. These fumes are harmless to vegetable life but are death to most insects. Ribes.

ROSE RICHMOND.

I had an opportunity lately of critically examining the new rose, Richmond, and am more pleased with it than ever and I venture to predict that the days of our erratic friend, Liberty, are numbered. While not possessing such a vivid and intense color as Liberty, the color is very pleasing, the buds long, pointed and of good shape, opens to a nice form and possesses first-class keeping qualities. A free grower, good producer and carries the bud on a fine stem, well supplied with leaves of a good texture and rich color. I congratulate Mr. Hill on being the possessor of such a gem. Ribes.

TROUBLE WITH TEAS.

I send a sample of a diseased Bride plant. Something has started in my roses and one after another is being affected. They were planted the last of June out of 3-inch pots into a clay sod with about one-fifth cow manure. We did not allow them to bloom until the latter part of September. They have been mulched twice with cow manure, but about December 15 we removed the last mulch. Since then we have done nothing to them. One or two bushes have died out completely. They have had no mildew and have had air night and day until cold weather set in; since then have given them air whenever possible. The houses have been kept at 56 to 60 degrees. We have used no bone meal or lime. Have had no green fly until lately. Smoked regularly once a week, also syringed whenever possible. Had about the same trouble last year but put the blame on using too much sulphur on the pipes. About December 1 we trimmed off some of the blind wood to give sun and air a chance to get between and shortly after the Maids started to turn pale; lately they have come a little more true to color. Have also Ivory and Golden Gate on the same benches but they seem to be all right. W. A. S.

A Whip Graft.

After a critical examination of the specimen received, I am inclined to think that these roses must frequently be exposed to a higher temperature than 56 or even 60 degrees during the night and there also seems to have been the lack of proper ventilation.

Where the greatest error occurred was in mulching before the plants were large enough to make use of it. This mulching has had the effect of excluding the sun from the soil and, as the plants show distinct evidence of having been frequently very dry at the point where the soil touched the bottom of the bench, this also can be ascribed to the mulching, as it frequently happens that the mulch absorbs and retains the moisture, giving the bench the appearance of being moist while the soil may be dry.

This would account for the thin texture of the foliage and the poor color of the petals.

I have never found it necessary to cut off any wood from young stock of Brides and Bridesmaids, except for propagating purposes, during midwinter and cannot imagine such a case and especially where the plants are so feeble as this specimen indicates.

Keep the surface of the bench clean and moist enough to prevent cracking. Reduce the night temperature to 56 degrees and be sure it remains at that point. Run it up to 75 or 80 degrees, according to intensity of sunshine. Refrain from feeding until health is again established. Give air freely on all favorable occasions. Use the syringe to keep down spider. If these methods are followed with good judgment and soil and water are of good quality there is no reason why these roses should not recover in time and give a good account of themselves. Ribes.

CINDERS FOR BENCHES.

Is there any damage in using cinders instead of sand for covering the benches to set pot plants on? What would be the best paying crop to put in a carnation house where carnations have died out? Would asters fill the bill?

W. A. S.

What you call cinders are usually called ashes. They are what shake through the fire bars. We sift them through a ½-inch mesh sieve. They are used, possibly, more than any other material for spreading on the benches to set the potted plants on. We have used the ashes of both hard and soft coal, as well as coke. All are useful for the purpose. Last February our supply of sand ran out and my son spread three inches of sifted coke ashes on a bench with little or no bottom heat, for a very little heat penetrates an inch board. Among other varieties of carnations, he put in a thousand cuttings of Estelle. They were, after being in the ashes three weeks, the richest, best colored and altogether the healthiest batch of cuttings I ever saw, and I could not discover a cutting that was not rooted. Chrysanthemums and a host of other soft-wooded plants root finely in coal ashes. I only quote the above to show how harmless they are.

As you have the soil on the bench where carnations have failed, I should suggest lettuce. You might, by good management, get three crops before it could be grown outside. Sweet peas sown before the end of the month would produce at Easter, and that is not the only time that they sell well; during the months of May and June there is a great demand for them. If your local wholesale market is good you could stock up with azaleas and other Easter plants. There is time enough for hybrid perpetual roses in pots and after Easter you should need the bench for geraniums and other bedding plants. W. S.

BUYS AN "OFF-PINK."

A resident of Tarrytown-on-Hudson has paid $20,000 for a pink. This is a species of "frenzied finance" of which probably even Mr. Lawson would approve, as the flower in question is an off-pink of the famous pink for which the Boston financier paid $25,000.—New York Tribune.

The above was copied into a Buffalo paper. I can think of only two gentlemen likely to pay such a fancy price for an "off-pink." They are Frank R. Pierson and William Rockefeller. There may be several others residing in that charming locality on the eastern shore of the Hudson, but I am not sufficiently intimate with them to know of their propensity to invest so heavily. If it is Mr. Rockefeller, then it's a commendable distribution of superfluous wealth. If it's Mr. Pierson, then we would say he's not only "off" pink but "off" generally.

But we suspect this dream is about fourteen times a greater exaggeration than the price said to be paid by "frenzied finance" Lawson for the marvelous production of Peter Fisher's skill, which marked an epoch in carnation culture. W. S.

COAL CONSUMED.

We have 26,000 feet of glass and our coal costs us $1.50 per ton on cars in our city, in Pennsylvania. We can haul four to five loads a day from the cars to the greenhouses. Last season we burned twenty-five pounds for each square foot of glass. B. B.

I have a greenhouse near Philadelphia, 24x70 feet, two-thirds heated for roses and one-third for carnations. Last winter I burned sixteen tons of stove coal. The house contains about 1,680 square feet of glass. This would bring the coal consumed to about twenty pounds per square foot of glass. C. L.

HYACINTHS AND OTHERS.

I potted the following bulbs on December 6: Dutch hyacinths, Von Sion narcissi, single tulips and Lilium Harrisii. I wish to have them in bloom for Easter. I have a house where I can maintain a temperature of 60 degrees at night and 70 degrees in the daytime, with a little higher if needed, I have had the pots in a suitable place since planting. How will I proceed to get the desired result? R. P.

You potted all your bulbs much too late, yet if the hyacinths, narcissi and tulips are outside and covered with three or four inches of soil or tanbark and stable litter or leaves, you will have no trouble in flowering them finely at Easter. This festival arrives so late this year that these bulbs will be far advanced and other years when Easter came as late we found that two weeks in the greenhouse was plenty of time to bring them into flower. Don't forget that. The Lilium Harrisii potted as late as December 6 will hardly have made any top growth as yet and would be better in 50 degrees at night and about middle of February give them the 60 degrees temperature. CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Selection in Propagation.

I will venture the statement that you are anxious to improve or at least to keep every variety you grow up to standard and have decided on what sorts you will continue. During daily attention to watering, disbudding, cutting, etc., you have no doubt noticed some particularly vigorous and shapely plants, or others from which numerous blooms have been cut. It is well to take careful note of the quality of bloom from these plants as an aid in deciding what plants are worthy of becoming ancestors.

In a bench of 1,000 or 2,000 you can single out 100 or 200 and treat them as stock plants without materially affecting the cut of bloom.

Propagation by cuttings is supposed to produce plants exactly like the parent, but we know this is not literally true. Probably if the same conditions could be maintained as were during the growth of the parent plant, there would be no perceptible variation but this is a physical impossibility, owing to conditions beyond our control, and it is well this is so, as it is these variations that allow selection of higher or improved types.

Inasmuch as the hybridizer must select vigorous parents to produce varieties of superior merit, so must the grower, to maintain these meritorious qualities, choose his young stock from plants approaching the nearest to perfection, or, as stock breeders say, from thoroughbreds.

Heavy feeding or strong forcing for the production of large quantities of bloom is not conducive to the making of thoroughbreds, as by this means the greater part of the energy is expended in the efforts of increase through the medium of seed, while our plan is to employ cuttings.

As advised in former years, and intimated above, the ideal way to obtain strong, desirable cuttings is to grow plants for the purpose. I do not mean by this that they should be prevented from blooming, for, on the contrary, there are good reasons why they should be allowed to do so, but under restriction.

It is an unvarying law of nature that the ability or power of a plant to flower or increase will degenerate and be lost by disuse; that is, if prevention from blooming is carried too far this property will become impaired or destroyed and the whole plant weakened. On the other hand if restricted to the extent that its gland system can replace the worn out parts, the plant gains vigor.

Now, if you have a thrifty batch of a paying variety and wish to grow it largely next year, do not trim the plants to bare poles and ride it hard for cuttings. Better take two years in working up a vigorous stock by careful selection than to take chances of boarding a lot of "would bes" and "has beens" next winter. If the variety possesses true merit you cannot get all there is in it during one season. We see examples every year of sterling varieties joining the silent majority through the mad rush for cuttings.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

Value of the National Meeting.

Have you arranged to attend the American Carnation Society's convention at Chicago next week? If you have not made up your mind to go you had better do so at once. It will pay you handsomely for the time and money it will cost. The exhibition alone will be worth going many miles to see, to say nothing of the valuable information one always gathers at such a place. There you will see all the new candidates of the year, besides those of recent years, and you can compare them and select those you may want to invest in. If you have already ordered some new ones you will be sure to meet the originator, and you can talk to him about their peculiarities and their likes and dislikes, and you will be sure to have better success with them as a result.

Then, again, you will be able to see how your own stock compares with that from the best growers of the land. If you bought some new ones last spring and they have disappointed you, you may run across some grower who is showing some extra fine blooms of those same varieties and you can find out from him where you have erred.

If you have some extra fine stock yourself and you imagine there is none so good in the land, take a bunch along and show them what you can do. You may change your mind after you see some of the other fellow's stuff. If you have some pet seedlings, by all means take some along and compare them with those from other growers. It's the best place in the world to see whether you are keeping up with the procession in your work. If you have some extraordinarily good ones you will profit immensely by having shown them and, on the other hand, if they are not as good as you imagine it will help you to make up your mind to discard those that are not up to the mark.

But don't think that your free blooming varieties will have to measure in size with the largest blooms you see there. Your variety may be much more profitable than the large one, and most probably it will be. So when you select the varieties you wish to buy, don't be influenced too much by the size, but find out all you can about freedom and the quality of culture required, etc. Always bear in mind that these blooms are in most cases grown by expert growers and have received the very highest possible culture and that another variety which looks far inferior, if it had the same degree of culture, perhaps it would show up just as good. A very good illustration of how misleading the list of prize winners might be occurred at Detroit last March, when Alba defeated Lady Bountiful, The Belle, and several others. Those who have grown these varieties know how much inferior Alba is to the others as a money maker. The varieties that produce the largest bloom and score the highest are not necessarily the most profitable ones for the commercial grower. See how the variety Adonis has been laying all other reds low, but I have yet to see the grower who was able to make any money out of it. So don't be carried off your feet by the fine appearance of a variety unless you are satisfied that it has the health and freedom necessary to make it profitable.

And after you have absorbed all the information and good in general there is to be had, don't be so ungrateful as to leave without becoming a member of the society. The two-dollar fee will not hurt you, but it will help the society to keep up. It is the only means of income the society has, and think of what this society has done for every grower of carnations! Besides it will give you admission to the banquet, which alone is worth several times the price, and surely you would not impose upon your friend who is a member, by asking him to take you in. He may not want to refuse you, but he really has no right to take you in and he cannot if the committee in charge does its duty. So plank down your two dollars and join the society that has done you more real good than any benefit society you have ever belonged to.

CARNATIONS FOR SUMMER.

I have a bench of American Beauty roses that have, I might say, failed, due I think to the use of wood ashes too freely. The Beauties did very well up to about September. We used a barrel of ashes to a bench 5x110 feet. About September the foliage began to yellow, flowers short-stemmed and of little value. I have a fine lot of Enchantress and Lawson just potted in 3-inch pots. Will it do to take the Beauties out, turn the soil and plant the carnations for summer blooming? My intention is to pull these out again in the autumn and replant for winter blooming. J. H.

If the wood ashes were strong enough to seriously injure your Beauties I certainly would not advise you to plant anything else in the same soil. Better take the soil out and refill with fresh soil, the same as you use for planting carnations in the fall. The Enchantress and Lawson, if planted as soon as they become established in the 3-inch pots, say about March 1, ought to do nicely and give you a fine crop of blooms early in the summer, especially the Enchantress. The Lawson stems might come a little short. There would be no need of replanting again in the fall, in fact, I would not think of it. Those plants will make the finest stock on your place next winter if you top dress and mulch them occasionally next fall and winter. They will require a little more feeding than fall-planted stock, but they will pay you mighty well for it.

THE WITTERSTAETTER WAY.

The carnation growing establishment of R. Witterstaetter, just over the hills from Cincinnati, is one of the remarkable places of the country, not for its size, for there are many larger, but for the fact that save for Enchantress and Cardinal, no other variety on the place is to be seen anywhere else; all, including Cardinal, are seedlings, originating there.

Good culture is the rule and one must look far and wide to find stock in better shape. "For years," says Mr. Witterstaetter, "it hardly paid to grow the best quality for the Cincinnati market, but now the retailers are finding more people who want the finest flowers and they are willing to pay me what such stock is worth. In fact, the demand is now all that I can supply."

This is the establishment whence came Adonis, Enquirer, Cardinal and several others, and there are half a dozen sorts now on the place which would immediately be put on the market if they belonged to anyone else. One, indeed, the proprietor feels, is good enough to do credit to his name, and will be introduced in a year or two. It is nameless, but is known as the "Improved Lawson," not that it has any strain of Lawson blood in its parentage, but that Mr. Witterstaetter thinks it, being in the same class for color, will prove to have all the good points of that variety and several added virtues. Principal of these latter is the fact that it is an early bloomer and makes from the start stems up to Lawson's best mid-winter standard. It is of splendid form. When one says that he has something better than Lawson he encounters the incredulity of the rank and file of growers, but here is one worth watching.

There is a White Lawson here, but a still better white, in the eyes of Mr. Witterstaetter is one which is an even more profuse bloomer for him. Another white is a pronounced departure in form from all existing varieties, the flower being almost a perfect hemisphere. the petals being scalloped, not fringed, and remarkable for their regularity. There is only a small stock of this, but it catches the eye on sight.

There are several good reds which are of good size and form, but habit of growth is more important than all else in Mr. Witterstaetter's view. One is ideal in this respect, and may be put out if it holds good by comparison with the several new reds shortly to be distributed.

In one house there is a half bench of a seedling from Enquirer. In form and color it is very like Fiancee, possibly a little larger.

Mr. Witterstaetter has recently enlarged his place and it is in all respects a model. He had a large part of his cuttings in the sand before Christmas. He does not trim them at all.

SHEEP MANURE FOR MULCH.

I am intending to use pulverized sheep manure as a top dressing for carnations. What kind of a top dressing would it make to mix that with cotton seed meal and pulverized bone, and in what proportion should they be used?

H. B. G.

I do not know anything about the value of cotton seed meal as a fertilizer or what fertilizing properties it contains. The sheep manure, with ground bone mixed through it, will make an excellent top dressing. I would add about a 4-inch pot of bone to one bushel of sheep manure and thoroughly mix it. Spread it on the soil about a half-inch thick and water soon after you put it on. I would mix it several days before putting it on the beds and turn it over once each day. A. F. J. BAUR.

A "BREAD AND BUTTER" RED.

The call is not all for fancy varieties of carnations these days, for many growers, espccially among those who retail their own product, have found that to produce the big exhibition blooms requires care, if not skill, beyond what they can afford to devote to them. Besides, to get a regular supply of these big flowers often requires a larger number of plants than the grower who is not a specialist has room for. And without a regular supply, the very best variety loses half its value; you have it when you don't need it and when you need it you haven't got it. The result is that there is a good field for the so-called "bread and butter" varieties, the sorts which, while they do not give fancy flowers, are healthy and easy to grow, give a steady cut and an abundance of bloom.

Charles Knopf, the managing partner in the B. K. & B. Floral Co., was foreman for E. T. Grave, at Richmond, when the carnation now known as Richmond Gem was produced from seed and thought so highly of it that, when he started in business for himself, he bought the stock. He has now grown Richmond Gem for five years and likes it better every season. It does not come under the head of fancy, either in size of flower or length of stem, although it has all the size and stem required for a general-purpose variety. The color is a very good red and at Christmas a very large cut was sold at 7 cents per flower. The variety's strong point is its freedom and steadiness of bloom. The accompanying illustration shows one of Mr. Knopf's houses photographed at holiday time.

The B. K. & B. Floral Co. has a very neat plant, five houses, 250 feet long. All their stock is well grown, much of it being shipped direct to retail florists and the balance consigned to the Cincinnati market. Several seedlings are being coached. One variety Mr. Knopf thinks isn't as generally grown as it should be is The Queen.

THE CARNATION SHOW.

All plans are now complete for next week's convention and exhibition of the American Carnation Society, at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago. A large attendance is assured and also a large exhibition. All the new sorts will, of course, be shown and the display of standard varieties will be much larger than was thought possible a couple of weeks ago, when cuts were light and prices high. All that is required to give the show a good start is favorable weather but storms, should they occur, are not likely to seriously disturb affairs, for the hour for staging is 1 o'clock and practically all the trains are due in the early morning hours. At no time this winter have the through trains been delayed more than an hour or two. The date is five weeks earlier than last year.

The illness of George Wienhoeber will prevent his appearing before the convention so that the essayists will be three, Prof. Hasselbring, Fred Lemon and C. L. Washburn. The judges were elected at last year's convention. They are W. N.

Rudd, Wm. Scott and Wm. Nicholson. Mr. Scott has been quite ill for several weeks and writes that he has abandoned hope of attending.

The Chicago Florists' Club will be the host at a banquet as the closing feature of the convention. Many of the visitors will remain a day or two to visit the well-known carnation growing establishments in the vicinity of Chicago.

McKINLEY'S FAVORITE FLOWER.

On McKinley day, January 29, a great many people will insist on having a carnation of a certain color, in the belief that it was Mr. McKinley's favorite. As a matter of fact it was the carnation that Mr. McKinley loved, without regard to color. An evidence of this is the fact that different people will argue that he wore a red flower or a pink or crimson, not agreeing at all as to color. Each may have had the evidence of his own eyes, for Mr. McKinley wore them all, and white.

If McKinley day is to become of value to the florists it is of importance that all colors of carnations be recognized as appropriate for the purpose of the occasion. There is a little story which may serve to turn many people from a belief that they must have a color: Not long since a well-known florist chanced to be in Canton and was accorded the privilege of entering the vault in which McKinley's body lies. There upon the casket lay a great bunch of white carnations with the card of Mrs. Roosevelt. Surely had Mr. McKinley's favorite been pink or red Mrs. Roosevelt would not have sent white.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY

The Chicago Meeting.

The meeting and exhibition of this society will be held in the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, January 25 and 26. Every one interested in carnations is invited to come and meet with us. Special rates of a fare and one-third, on the certificate plan, have been granted from all points east of and including Denver. The small sum of $2 makes you a member of the society and pays one year's dues. This entitles you to exhibit any new or old carnation you may have to show.

The Auditorium Hotel can take care of all members at reasonable rates, especially where two will occupy the same room. This puts all under one roof, lodging, the meeting and exhibition and weather need not be taken into account.

There are so many sports of Lawson coming into the field that this society would like, for the sake of uniformity and to avoid the introduction of the same variety under different names, to have every carnation grower who has a sport from Lawson, of any color, to exhibit the same at this meeting, and especially so if he intends placing it on the market. Where the grower does not accompany the box it should be marked as follows: "The American Carnation Society, Chicago, Ill., care of P. J. Hauswirth, Auditorium Hotel; Prepaid."

Department of Registration.

Patten & Co., Tewksbury, Mass., register Mikado; color white, overlaid with crimson, a seedling of 1902, a cross of Gov. Roosevelt and Prosperity, style of growth like Gov. Roosevelt, size of blooms three to three and one-half inches. Pink Patten; color clear dark pink, a sport from Mrs. M. A. Patten.

CARNATION DAY.

The accompanying portrait is that of Lewis G. Reynolds, of Dayton, O., to whom the trade is indebted for the idea of the Carnation League of America, with its three millions of members, each of whom will wear a carnation on January 29, the anniversary of President McKinley's birthday. The Florists' McKinley Memorial Fund committee has at different times detailed the objects of The Carnation League of America, and the benefits already derived, and to be derived, from this popular movement and it now feels that the time has come for prompt action.

The committee has expended considerable effort to place this question before the trade; a fair number have subscribed to the fund; a greater number have pledged themselves; but the greatest number have failed to respond. Those who have paid, the committee heartily thanks; to those who have subscribed, but not paid, the committee would urge prompt payment, so that they may receive their certificate before January 29, and to the great number who have failed to respond, either through neglect or indifference, the committee would urge prompt action.

Lewis G. Reynolds.

The grower and the wholesaler are equally interested and benefited with the retailer; therefore it behooves all, from the employee to the proprietor, to have a part in a movement that will bring manifold good to our profession. A generous response will easily attain our object and obtain for our profession a fund for the National McKinley Memorial that will prove a lasting monument to the florists' profession and that will bring back to us many times the amount invested.

Any donation (the committee terms it investment) of $1 or more entitles the member to a handsome steel engraved certificate, fit to be framed, which when displayed in your place of business will prove a lasting appeal to the sentiment and patriotism of your customers, and an indication of your own loyalty to, and your interest in, our great republic.

"Do it now," and send your remittances to the undersigned.

SUCCESSIONAL SOWINGS.

Keeping the benches full is a matter of much importance. It only requires a little foresight but carelessness or procrastination in the matter may cause quite some delay, which at the year's end results in considerable shortage in receipts. The thoughtful grower always has plants ready to fill up his benches just as soon as a crop is harvested.

It is useless to try to lay down any hard and fast rule or to say just how many days or weeks should elapse between sowings of the different subjects. It is pretty much of an individual matter, so few are placed just alike in regards to space or demand. If a constant supply of all or any of the several vegetables employed for forcing is to be kept up they will naturally have to be kept coming along in all the different stages, so that when one bench is finished another is ready to begin on and the time between the sowings must be regulated by the length of time the supply in the bench will last. In such cases there is little danger of a shortage, as sowings would be regularly made every week or ten days with such subjects as cauliflower and lettuce and about every four weeks with tomatoes and cucumbers.

Cauliflower heart up pretty much together and in about a week from the time of starting to cut, the bench would be pretty well cleared. Lettuce would take about the same time, although the time could be extended a few days without danger of loss if necessary. The length of time tomato or cucumber plants will bear, depends pretty much on the space the plants are allowed to cover but from four to six weeks is about the average time that they can be depended on to keep up a supply.

It is usually in the smaller places that we see time lost, where there is no attempt made to keep up a steady supply, but where a house or bench may be used to grow one thing now and another thing again. A grower often finds that he can grow such crops as lettuce and cauliflower through the coldest of the winter days but cannot command enough heat to grow cucumbers or tomatoes, though he may be so placed that the latter crops are the more profitable; then through the warmer spring months the changed conditions make it possible for him to grow the other crops. In such cases it is well for him to look well ahead and have his seed planted in good time so that his plants will be coming along and be in the best possible stage for planting by the time his space is ready for their accommodation.

There is, of course, a medium to be struck. It would be just as bad to have the plants too large as to have them too small. If tomatoes are under way a little too soon they can be kept moved up into larger pots and kept growing on and, even if they are larger than desired when planting time comes, they will quickly take to the soil and go ahead without much check. Cucumbers, on the other hand, are not so well adapted for moving up into larger pots. It is better to plant them in the benches when the plants are from four to six inches high. If kept confined in any way they are apt to become weak and spindly. Being soft-rooted they are very susceptible to injury and once checked take quite some time to recuperate.

In sowing, for tomatoes about six weeks should be allowed for the plants to attain sufficient size for benching; for cucumbers, four, or not more than five weeks would be quite long enough. Four to five weeks is also about the length of time that should be allowed for both lettuce and cauliflower. I don't believe in setting out large plants of either of the last named subjects, as they take quicker hold of the soil when not too large.

With any of the above named subjects, however, a great deal will depend on the freshness of the seed. Old seed not only germinates slowly but there is always a weakness about the plants, growth being slower after they are started. It takes almost two weeks longer to produce plants of the required size from old seed than it does when the seed is fresh. It is therefore a good plan to try the seed before hand to make sure of its germinating power and vigor, and if you have been unfortunate enough to get stuck with old seed, to make allowance for the extra time it will require to have the plants large enough for setting out. W. S. CROYDON.

BOSTON.

The Market.

We have had a week of comparatively clear and bright weather since our last report, a pleasant change from the conditions existing a week earlier. Naturally production has increased considerably, without any proportionate increase in demand. Roses have continued to hold their own pretty well for the cut of these is not very heavy at present. Some of the largest growers have their Beauties off crop and the quantity of select stock coming in is much smaller. A few select reach $50, a more popular grade going at $25. Brides and Maids have made $8 to $10 for good stock, a few extra fine going higher. Rather too many second and third grades of these are coming in.

There is not much change in prices of carnations, about $3 to $4 being as much as select stock has brought, a few fancies selling higher. Both in the markets and commission houses a considerable overstock was noticeable the past week. Violets are coming in much more abundantly and have taken quite a slump in prices, the best making 50 cents, ordinary only fetching 25 to 35 cents. Such a heavy drop in prices is rather surprising. We think they will advance again later in the season. Bulbous stock has been in rather better demand for funeral work. There have been no particular changes in prices of other flowers.

Various Notes.

The opening lecture of the winter season at Horticultural Hall on January 14, drew a good audience. The lecturer was Prof. H. L. Fernald, of Cambridge, his subject being "Some recently introduced weeds." He gave a list of eighteen varieties of weeds of recent introduction, which have appeared as pests in various localities near here and showed herbarium specimens to enable those present to identify them. Impure clover seeds had undoubtedly brought some of the most dangerous kinds. The suggestions for dealing with weed pests included the prevention of their seeding, the ploughing of the land and salting where necessary.

Quite a number of prominent growers have been, or now are, on the sick list. William Nicholson has been confined to bed with the grip. He has also suffered from a fall on an icy sidewalk in Boston. E. A. Peirce, E. Sutermeister and a number of others have also been in the hands of doctors. We trust all may be well ere the time arrives for the Chicago convention.

Backer & Co., of Billerica, grow some of the best carnations going into our market. They are also in the seedling business and have some very promising ones. A bright rosy pink variety, something in the way of Lawson, but with longer and more wiry stems, has the making of a good commercial variety.

F. A. Blake's new scarlet seedling, No. 67, is attracting considerable notice at Welch Bros. The same grower is shipping one of a very unique magenta color, which seems to sell well. He has a large assortment of other seedlings, some of which are very distinct and promising. Geo. M. Anderson also has a fine scarlet seedling which he ships to the same firm.

Geo. McWilliam, of Whitinsville, has a superb display of calanthes at present. These he grows in quantity and to remarkable perfection. While a number of species are grown, the larger proportion are of C. Veitchii. Mr. McWilliam has produced bulbs of these fourteen inches long and has had on one or two occascions as many as seven spikes come from one bulb, and frequently five, although he usually allows but three to develop. He has a record of over 100 flowers on a spike and has numerous spikes carrying fifty to seventy-five flowers this season. He is surprised that an orchid, comparatively inexpensive and of easy culture, lending itself so well for decorative purposes and lasting so well in a cut state, is hardly grown at all commercially.

Our Boston, Brockton and other papers have been printing some delightful stories anent the Variegated Lawson recently sold by W. B. Arnold to the F. R. Pierson Co. Mr. Pierson is very flatteringly described as "a millionaire resident at Tarrytown-on-Hudson" and is stated "to have paid the sum of $20,000 for the new freak Lawson sport," a mere bagatelle surely for a millionaire.

The meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, of which a more extended report will appear next week, proved to be a stimulating one in every way. Exhibits were again numerous, C. W. Ward's collection being especially fine. Guttman & Weber's Victory also came in for much admiration. A hearty invitation to the American Carnation Society to meet in Boston in 1906 was adopted.

Sabin Bolton, head gardener for Oakes Ames, of North Easton, has a fine collection of varieties of Cypripedium insigne in bloom at present, including all the best yellow forms. Among the latter C. Sanderæ gigantea is the finest, being larger and bolder than Sanderæ, Other fine named types are citrinum, Lutwytcheanum, Ballæ, Cobbianum, Vanner's variety, Laura Kimball, Ernestii, Dorothy and Sanderianum. Fine plants of that grand variety, Harefield Hall, are also conspicuous.

Those who are growing Carnation Nelson Fisher speak in high terms of the excellent way in which that variety holds its color. One large grower stated that he had kept it two weeks in water without its losing any color.

We are all hoping that the American Carnation Society will vote to come to Boston in 1906. Massachusetts has come to the fore, since the last convention met at the old Horticultural Hall in 1895, as a raiser of seedlings. Such standard sorts as Lawson, Queen, Wolcott, Mrs. M. A. Patten, Nelson Fisher, Boston Market and others were all raised near Boston and even better kinds are in preparation.

W. N. CRAIG.

WASHINGTON.

Continuous cloudy weather has prevailed for nearly two months, making flowers of all kinds scarcer than they have been for several years, but the last two weeks have been very quiet. The last two days, with our opening season of receptions, the sun has shown itself, which gives brighter faces among the growers. Maids and Brides are moving well at $12.50 to $20 per hundred, La France, $10 to $15, Beauty fetches $5 to $12 per dozen. Tulips and narcissi are moving slowly at $2 to $3. Southern violets are very low and hard to move at 25 to 50 cents per hundred. Northern violets are fast taking the place of southern ones. The day is not far distant when they will be doomed. Blooming plants are coming in finely, but on account of very bad weather they do not move at all.

Various Notes.

Gude & Bro. have been cutting some very fine Beauties and Cardinals. The Cardinal seems to be a shy bloomer with them, but what flowers come do well and it is a fine keeper.

Geo. Schaffer has quite a few dinners booked for the coming week and is also doing quite a lot of funeral work.

Blackistone says he is filled up with orders. He claims stock is scarcer than orders with him.

Mayberry & Hoover say they have all that they can do, both funeral work and dinners.

Brooks is doing considerable funeral work.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held last Tuesday, W. F. Gude presiding. The attendance was quite large in spite of the blizzard. The most important business was the appointment of the various committees for the S. A. F. convention. The hall committee recommended Convention Hall as being the most suitable. It is one of the largest and finest in the United States, seating 10,000 people and centrally located, only fifteen minutes' walk from the various hotels and reached by all street car lines with one fare. Secretary W. J. Stewart made us a flying visit and was met by our local committee, headed by Vice-president J. R. Freeman. After looking over the hall and giving us quite a lot of valuable information in regard to the convention, the committee adjourned to the French Castle for dinner.

Recent visitors: P. O'Mara, New York; M. Rice, B. Eschner, Martin Reukauf and S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia; F. X. Millman, Cumberland, Md.; P. Crowle, of Speilman & Sons, Sassenheim, Holland. Next week we will look for Holland and Belgian drummers in bunches.

MADISON, N. J.

The Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society, of this place, held its annual smoker on Wednesday evening, January 11. At this meeting the newly elected officers took their stations and, while the evening was largely given over to pleasure, it was evident that this year the society is going to boom along as it never did before. The newly elected officers are: President, John Herremans; vice-president, M. McNulty; secretary, Ed. Reagan; treasurer, Wm. Charlton. The newly elected president, while comparatively a new man in the district, has already shown his ability as a grower and the future of the society will be assured with him. The treasurer's report showed every bill paid for the year and a balance of some $250 in the treasury.

The punch that is brewed every year for this occasion has acquired international renown and it was up to the test for quality, strength and abundance. A first-class vaudeville show had been arranged and the boys were kept in roars of laughter until after midnight. This society voted several years ago to cut out the formal dinner and substitute the present style smoker and it seems to suit the members much better and good fellowship reigns supreme.

The E. G. Hill Co. sent on for exhibition a vase of their new rose, Richmond, and also one of Rosalind Orr English. One of our members brought down a vase of Liberty to compare it with Richmond and Richmond proved well able to take care of itself, being stronger in growth, heavier in foliage and a shade brighter in color. Wherever Richmond is shown it is doubtful if it will ever have to stand a more searching inspection than it did at Madison, because the members are mostly rose growers and many hundreds of dollars have been spent here testing new kinds only to meet with disappointment. To the credit of Richmond be it said that not one adverse comment was passed on it, the only question being as to its freedom and this part the introducer vouches for. A certificate was unanimously awarded. The Chicago Carnation Co. also received the club certificate for Fiancee, which, though somewhat battered by rough handling on the cars, showed up as grandly as ever.

The meeting finally came to an end, as all good things must, though it may be said to have been the longest session that the club has held for I understand some of the members did not get home for two days after. However, all is once more "quiet along the Potomac" and the only sound to be heard is the rose grower bewailing the fact that prices are again down out of sight and unless a change soon takes place, some of us will be meandering gently over the hill that leads to the poorhouse.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Last week was most unsatisfactory as to prices in the wholesale market and the tendency was constantly downward. Especially was this the case with violets. Even the finest specials at times fell to 75 cents, while ordinary stock could be had at any price, one prominent dealer closing out a surplus at $2 a thousand. The up-state growers will think seriously before adding the 100,000 square feet of glass meditated for 1905. Some premonitory spring exhibits are seen in the windows. Tulips, jonquils and lilac are abundant. Lilies are unlimited in quantity. Carnations fell to $1 a hundred for ordinary kinds on Saturday.

The retailers are all busy, however, the dinner and ball season having opened with a rush. Leikens had an especially beautiful decoration of white roses and American Beauties at the St. Regis. Hodgson had the decoration for the Astor ball. The coming weeks are full of engagements for functions that will tax the originality and best efforts of the floral artists. There should be nothing but prosperity to record for many a week.

Various Notes.

Don't forget that the annual dinner of the Florists' Club will take place two weeks from next Saturday evening. Mr. Sheridan has already sold enough tickets to insure a success of the affair.

Members of the trade desiring to contribute to the Vilmorin memorial are requested to send their subscriptions at once to A. T. Boddington, secretary of the committee, as the time is close at hand when the final remittance must be sent to France.

Sigmund Geller already has many Easter novelties on exhibition, the result of his European trip. Among other Christmas mementos, Mrs. Geller presented him with a handsome girl baby.

James Hart is shipping to out-of-town customers who have been on his books for over twenty years.

The Beauty King declares the bottom of the market has been reached and from now on until Easter the advance in values and volume will continue.

Real estate in upper New York and in Brooklyn is steadily advancing in value. Fortunate indeed are the florists whose ancestors located in the then suburbs of the town. James Dean, who has a mortgage on the presidency of Freeport, L. I., was one of the first to realize the rise in valuations. A slice of land from the Wier estate near Bay Ridge last week brought $60,000, and there are others "only waiting."

F. W. O. Schmitz, of Prince Bay, won his suit against Otto Grundemann, of Secaucus, last week, securing judgment for $628.23, and Fred W. Kelsey, of New York, secured a judgment for $900 and costs from George Gould, of Lakewood, N. J., for three cars of rhododendrons.

The Scottii fern is as popular as ever and Mr. Scott has had an enormous sale on it, nearly every New York retailer handling it in quantity. David Clarke's Sons say they cannot get enough of it and the demand is growing constantly. The expected call for the small stock will be anticipated by the erection of another range of glass at the Flatbush property early in the spring.

There will be a goodly contingent of New Yorkers at the carnation convention and some fine exhibits of novelties from the east.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

TORONTO.

Trade during the past two weeks has been very slow and stuff has accumulated considerably. Especially has this been the case with those who were not in time with their stock for Christmas, while those who were in for Christmas are so short on crop now that they do not feel the drop in business. Carnations have been gradually going down in price until we hear them quoted as low as 80 cents per hundred for very good stock. There is some satisfaction, however, in the fact that business in other lines is about as slow as in the flower business.

D. J.

Good Tea Roses are not abundant, but there is in all other lines. Very heavy crops of Beauties are on and long-stemmed in particularly heavy supply. Good carnations are selling much cheaper than usual at this time of year. Send us your orders.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Receipts are not large and a little good business would clean the market in most lines, but the outlet for the lower grades of material has been frozen up during the past week and the result has been to weaken the selling value of the better grades of stock. This has not been so apparent in the case of good tea roses from the fact that the supply of this item has been short and it has been impossible to fill all orders in the way the wholesalers would like to see them go out. There are considerable quantities of low grade Brides and Maids, which are hard to move. The Beauty situation shows some improvement. Quality is no better, in fact, probably not quite so good as it was a week ago, but receipts are smaller and demand a little heavier. The largest growers report their stock now cleaning up fairly well each day.

The receipts of carnations have been considerably larger than the requirements, but white stock has cleaned up quickly at good prices, the principal demand of the week having been for funeral material. Colored stock has been sold at very low rates in large lots.

At no time this season have violets been in so bad a shape as in the last week. The receipts have been very heavy indeed and the outlet for the stock has been closed by the zero weather, with the result that prices for even the best material are very low and large quantities go to waste. This includes many thousands of fine stock from the Hudson River district and if the returns these growers get from the New York market are any worse than what they will get from Chicago for the past week, they are indeed entitled to sympathy.

It has become a chronic condition that Romans and Paper Whites are a glut. There are now abundant supplies of Easter lilies and plenty of callas. Not many tulips are seen and every now and then a few bunches of yellow trumpet narcissi. There are increasing supplies of sweet peas and plenty of mignonette, stevia, etc.

The absence of social work has resulted in a slackening call for asparagus strings and smilax and other green goods and there are abundant supplies. Adiantum is not so plentiful. The jobbers are already taking common ferns from cold storage and beginning to pick them over. It looks somewhat as though they might have no idle moments towards spring.

The Winandy Matter.

The receiver for M. Winandy says that he has not yet succeeded in getting much light on the liabilities and assets in the case, but the further he goes the worse it looks. Besides those who had sold Mr. Winandy material, numerous parties had loaned him money and it appears that some of the neighbors, familiar with his splendid reputation for probity, had made him their banker. The receiver finds, however, to say the least, no haste on the part of the creditors to prove up their claims or even make public the amounts. The law gives a year in which to prove claims. In the meantime the receiver will try to keep the expenses inside the receipts. If he can not do it he will call a meeting of the creditors and let them decide if they want the plant closed. Bradstreet estimates the liabilities at $70,000.

Richmond Rose.

The new Richmond rose will be largely grown for this market next year. Peter Reinberg has again increased his order for stock and will get 15,000. The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. is considering building a new house 36x400 at New Castle and planting it with 7,000 Richmond and also planting part of another house with it. Bassett & Washburn and Poehlmann Bros. Co. have each bought 5,000 Richmond and Wietor Bros, have 2,500 with the privilege of doubling it within a certain date. Several others have ordered smaller quantities.

For McKinley Fund.

H. M. Altick, of Dayton, O., who is giving so much time and effort to raising funds for the McKinley memorial, was a visitor at the Florists' Club last Thursday. After listening to him the club endorsed his suggestion that each one who cared to do so set apart for the fund a percentage of his carnation sales for January 28 or 29. A committee consisting of George Asmus, E. C. Amling and Leonard Kill was appointed to bring the matter before the trade and the daily newspapers. Retailers are asked to give twenty-five per cent, growers fifteen per cent, and commission dealers five per cent of their carnation sales. Most of those present and a considerable number of others have endorsed the movement. Carnation day is worth helping along.

At the last meeting of the club thirteen new members were elected and several others proposed.

Various Notes.

It is reported that E. Asmus & Co., on Evanston avenue, have sold their stock and fixtures to Leopold Koropp, who has taken a lease of the property from Emil Buettner. Mr. Koropp is to take possession next week. He is not alone in the deal and will incorporate. He will continue his place on West Ravenswood Park avenue.

Not only will the Carnation Society convention attract florists to Chicago next week, but the annual exhibition of the National Fanciers' and Breeders' Association at the Coliseum January 23 to 28 will interest a number, several having been exhibitors of fancy stock in past years.

Kroeschell Bros. Co. invites the Carnation Society members, and all others who are interested in seeing how boilers are made, to visit its big plant on the north side.

Gus Lange says that the zero weather has had a very bad effect on transient trade in the down-town district. He has a little something doing all the time because he executes Chicago orders for a good many outside florists.

The A. Dietsch Co. has added a new building to its factory to increase its facilities in proportion to its increasing business.

John Turnbull returned Tuesday from a trip into the northwest for E. H. Hunt. He reports good business in that locality.

Vaughan & Sperry are steadily adding to their list of shippers and developing their shipping trade.

A. L. Randall Co. reports the special Hudson River violets, 100 in a bunch, cleaning up promptly, but a very poor market for lower grades.

E. C. Amling says the crop of bouvardia is pretty well at an end. It has been popular both for table work and for use in designs, but much of it would have brought more money if longer stemmed.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The trade outlook is satisfactory, despite several handicaps, especially the weather of the past week, which made walking not a very pleasant task and transient trade out of the question. About the only business done was over the telephone. Those who had plant decorations found it a difficult matter. Floral arrangements at most of the social affairs were small. A great deal of funeral work has been reported the past week, which made white flowers in great demand, while colored stock was in abundance at the wholesale houses. A few shipments came in frozen and were, of course, useless.

Quite a lot of long Beauties are in the market, greatly reduced in price. This stock was bought on Saturday for $3 per dozen, showing that the demand was slow. Beauties at $1 to $2 per dozen sold much better. Fancy stock in other roses had a fair sale, while lower grades went begging. Colored carnations are in oversupply, but whites were bought up each morning. The price was down to $2 and $3 per hundred the past week.

Bulbous stock is moving very slowly and the supply is greatly in excess of the demand. Callas and Harrisii are coming in more freely; so are freesias and Romans. Paper Whites and valley are almost a glut at the present time. Violets are becoming very plentiful and are not selling clean by any means. The call for greens is reported slow.

Some extra fine Lorraine begonias, azaleas, cyclamens and other blooming plants are seen in the windows of the west end florists, on which sales were reported slow the past week.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting last Thursday afternoon. President Juengel, having recovered from his recent illness, occupied the chair. Twenty members were present. The committee on transportation to Chicago reported a rate of $10 for the round trip and that all members going should report to the chairman, J. J. Beneke, by January 20, so that all the members can go in a body, as a special sleeper will be assigned to them by the Wabash.

The club declined to accept Robert Scott's resignation. Delinquent members were given one more month to pay or be dropped from the roll. On a motion the chair appointed as a committee to revise the constitution and by-laws, Messrs. Koenig, Schray and Meinhardt. The advisability of holding a flower show next fall was referred to the trustees, who are to make a report by next meeting.

A. Jablonsky made a motion to build a club house for meetings and exhibitions, with bowling alleys in the basement. A committee of three was appointed to look into the matter, as follows: A. Jablonsky, Fred Ammann and John Steidle.

The next meeting of the club will be our annual carnation meeting. This will be in charge of Messrs. Beneke, Schray and Meinhardt. Fifty dollars in prizes will be given. All carnation growers are invited to compete. This meeting will take place Thursday afternoon, February 9, at 2 o'clock.

Various Notes.

John Hanzel has opened a flower store at Taylor avenue and Olive street. Mr. Hanzel was formerly employed by Alex. Waldbart. He is making a fine show of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in his window this week.

Frank M. Ellis and John Burk were on a hunting trip in the Ozark mountains the past week. They claim that a carload of fine rabbits will follow this week. Any of the local florists who want a rabbit dinner should make application to Mr. Ellis. Fred Foster and Alex. Siegel were to have gone with the party, but the cold weather scared them off.

Chief F. W. Taylor and Superintendent J. H. Hadkinson are still in harness at the World's Fair and report that they will be for several months. The Palace of Horticulture is now in the hands of the wreckers and will by the end of the week be a thing of the past. Mr. Ussing, who was Mr. Hadkinson's right hand man during the season of the World's Fair, is now in the employ of Fred C. Weber.

The Ellison Floral Co. is moving this week, just across the street from the old location, to a much larger place, with three large show windows, giving them the much needed room.

A New Florists' Club.

An invitation has been sent to the different growers in and around St. Louis to join a new organization to which growers only are to be admitted to membership. A meeting has been called for this week Thursday, January 19, in Louisiana Hall. The notice sent out is signed by E. H. Michel, F. W. Ude, Jr., William Winter and E. Eggeling, Jr.

SWEET PEAS.

Will you kindly give me information on the following questions through your columns? At what time should sweet pea seed, variety Mont Blanc, be sown in solid beds in a greenhouse in order to have the bulk of the crop for next Easter, April 23? How far apart in the row and how deep should the seed be sown? Please state the best temperature for them, night and day. My compost is one year old and consists of four parts rotted sod and one part cow manure. Will it be necessary to feed them in addition to this at any time?

W. B. S.

This query has been sadly neglected, yet if the desired information has not been obtained elsewhere, there is no time lost. Sow the seed about the last of this month. Two inches deep is enough, or you can sow a few seeds in 3-inch pots and transfer to the bed when the plants are a few inches high. The rows should be eighteen inches to two feet apart and run north and south. Two plants may be allowed to each string. That is plenty thick enough, and the strings eight inches apart. Keep that strong growth which starts from the base of plants, and the lateral growths, pinched off or it will everwhelm the original vine, which is to give the flower. The night temperature should be from 45 to 48 degrees. Your compost needs no replenishing. It is amply rich enough; neither need you feed with liquid manure.

AFTER A FIRE.

I have left after my recent fire five empty benches, two middle benches with soil and three sides without, and almost all of my stock was destroyed. What could I put in my houses to bring me in a little surplus money for spring? I do a local and wholesale trade.

S. N. C.

There is a variety of crops that you might use to occupy the benches, but it would not pay to purchase enough stock to entirely fill all the benches at once or you would have no space for overflow, as the plants grew and needed more room. If you have a good demand at Easter, then there is time yet to start hybrid perpetual roses; also, you can procure azaleas, rhododendrons, deutzias or Spiræa Japonica. A few plants or rooted cuttings of several bedding plants if gotten at once can be propagated to any extent by spring. Such plants as coleus, achyranthes, heliotrope, etc. Then there is that most popular plant, the canna; fine plants of these at bedding time are always in good demand. Sweet peas can be sown and could be picked at Easter and on and there is a great demand for these in the month of May. The quickest crop to yield you any returns might be a bench of lettuce, which would be cut and out of the way in time for you to spread your bedding plants. I don't suppose I have anywhere near exhausted the list that would be available for your use. Lastly I would suggest a few hundred Japan longifiorums for Memorial day. Brought along cool they are in good demand for that occasion.

W. S.

SPIRAEA FOR EASTER.

Will you kindly tell me what kind of spiræa to grow, also culture of same? There are many varieties and I am not familiar with them; in fact, I have had no experience in that line. I intend growing a few plants of the best variety.

M. T. G.

This question was received a long time ago, yet there is time to purchase the roots and grow them for Easter; plenty of time. Many growers stick to the old species, Spiræa Japonica, which we can very well remember being grown in an old-fashioned conservatory fifty-five years ago. If I make it any more distant than that you will think I fought under Washington. In those days it was not a commercial plant and the same roots were forced year after year, but that would never pay nowadays in these strenuous, high pressure times. The roots are exceedingly inexpensive. It is the amount of bench space they need and the relatively low price at which they sell that make them by no means the most profitable plant we grow. As to kinds, Spiræa Japonica is excellent, very graceful and feathery, and I would advise you to grow most of that. Spiræa Japonica compacta makes a more dense, compact spike but is not as graceful for cutting. Then there are two other forms, Gladstone and the Washington variety. These make longer and larger spikes of bloom. Try a few of each.

Like other early flowering plants that we force, the nearer we approach the natural flowering time, the less time it will take to force them into flower. Pot them by the first of February and the first three weeks they can be placed under a bench and removed to the light as soon as top growth starts. As they should receive a pot only large enough to hold the ball of roots, and as they are prodigious rooters, they require copious and frequent watering once the leaf growth is well developed. It is of the utmost advantage the last three weeks of their growth to put a 6-inch or 7-inch

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The tone of the market is improving this week. The supply, especially of carnations, is a trifle lighter. While there is not enough business to use all the flowers offered, the tendency toward lower prices appears to be creating more demand for the lower grades. The feature of the market this week is the increase in the so-called spring flowers, usually so popular during February: Daffodils, chiefly single, which are selling exceptionally well; tulips, sweet peas, pansies, daisies, freesias, which are unusually scarce so far this season. Mignonette and forget-me-nots are the latest acquisitions at S. S. Pennock's. Two staple flowers that might be properly classed in this section, violets and lilies of the valley, are experiencing a period of dullness.

Roses of good quality have been really scarce ever since New Year's. Even the poorer ones have not found their way to the street during the recent ten days of carnation slaughter. Long Beauties are more plentiful now, but the medium grades continue scarce, Liberty helping to fill their place. Good Bride and Bridesmaid are scarce. Cattleyas and gardenias are more plentiful and lower in price. There are plenty of cypripediums about. White lilacs are to be found at nearly all the commission houses. The quality is very fair and the demand increasing. Poinsettias are about over. Montresor, Yellow Prince and La Reine have succeeded Proserpine as the tulips of the day.

A Probable Settlement.

The meeting at Forty-ninth and Market streets last week was not called by the assignee, as erroneously stated in this column two weeks ago, but by the firm. Robert Craig addressed a meeting of about fifty of his firm's creditors and their representatives. He presented the case fully. The discussion that followed lasted for over an hour. Nearly all those who spoke favored the acceptance of the offer of 50 cents on the dollar. The assignee was not present, nor was he represented.

A very large majority of the creditors have accepted the fifty-cent offer. It was stated on the street that the offer was made possible by a prominent seedsman agreeing to furnish the money necessary on security, presumably of the real estate. Should the plan go through, as now seems probable, it is believed that enough will be saved to enable the firm to resume business by July 1. This will give great pleasure to the friends of Robert Craig. Their number is legion all over the country.

At the Bellevue-Stratford.

John P. Habermehl was busily engaged in his handsome new shop when Phil called. Mr. Habermehl very courteously made time to show his visitor the improved ice-box facilities. The beautiful show-case is chilled by frost-covered pipes operated by a cold storage plant. A pan arrangement permits cleaning the pipes without removing the flowers from or making any dirt in the case.

In the light and airy cellar underneath is another case in which the greens and flowers sold are kept. The hotel engineer regulates the pipes in both cases each day. Downstairs also is the workroom and storeroom, the shelves filled with paper, boxes, jars, etc. The space, though limited, is sufficient, except for very large orders, which are executed at the Messrs. Habermehl's store and greenhouses at Twenty-second and Diamond streets. Plants and rough material are admitted by a side door communicating with the back stairway. Three phones are kept constantly in use. Mr. Habermehl expressed himself as well pleased with the business done in his new store so far.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co.'s supply of long-stemmed American Beauties is very fine now. They are handling a great many nice yellow and white tulips and white lilacs. A heavy business in galax and hardy ferns has been developed. Their shipping orders cover the entire range of market staples and are very important factors of their large business.

A. E. Wohlert, of Bala, has sent some fronds of a new adiantum to Fred Ehret. This is a very pretty thing that bears something the same resemblance to Adiantum cuneatum that Asparagus Sprengeri does to Asparagus plumosus.

The Henry A. Dreer Co. is sending out hardy rhodendrons and azaleas for Easter forcing.

Steven Mortensen, of Southampton, is cutting a nice crop of choice Brides, Maids and Liberties. They go, as of yore, to S. S. Pennock. Mr. Pennock must have mentioned this at his home, or it got about somehow, for a party of the Lansdowne florists, James Verner, William Munro, W. A. Leonard and David Anderson, were seen journeying out to Southampton last week.

The Flower Market has established a reputation for lightning delivery and fine stock.

Edward Reid has been experiencing a lively demand for his choice Hudson River Marie Louise violets. Mr. Reid is both for and against Campbell, odd but true.

Berger Bros. are handling some nice mignonette and sweet peas.

Edward Seidewitz, of Annapolis, was in this city recently.

H. H. Battles has been wintering at Thornhedge. This is his first season in the country.

L. K. Peacock proposes abandoning carnations and violets after this season in order to devote himself exclusively to the dahlia.

The Floral Exchange is sending some nice Golden Gate to E. Bernheimer.

Wm. J. Moore is becoming a decided factor in the carnation market.

John G. Gardiner addressed the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society on the multiflora as a stock for grafting outdoor roses last Tuesday evening.

M. Rice & Co. are developing their ribbon business among florists exclusively. Their dotted chiffons in soft and pleasing colors are very effective for tying on baskets.

Johnson & Stokes are calling attention to the probable shortage in several important vegetable seeds, recommending the placing of early orders.

The army of Holland bulb growers' salesmen has been hard at work since New Year's industriously canvassing this country.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. propose making a specialty of twig baskets in all sizes for Easter. They are very pretty and will make excellent ground work for display effects.

Albert Woltemate and George Redles have been visiting among the members of the Germantown Horticultural Society. They propose interesting J. F. Mergenthaler in that active body.

The recent public utterances of David Rust, though somewhat guarded, like that at the Grecian oracle at Delphi, lead to the hope among the cut flower men that he may occasionally be seen at their camp, even at the holidays.

Answers to Correspondents.

REVIEW readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses or the Flower Market. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

24—I have been shipping carnations to a commission house until after Christmas. The returns were poor. I changed to another commission house, with worse results. Would I do better by dividing my stock and shipping half to one and half to the other?

It is not a good plan to divide shipments unless the place is a very large one. Changing around during the season is one of the evils of our business. When a commission man develops a trade for your stock it is only fair to stand by him until the end of the season. When returns are poor, go in town and look carefully over the field yourself before making a change. It will pay.

25—Who is the best general cultural writer of the day? William Scott, of Buffalo, who writes for the REVIEW.

Seed Trade News.

VISITED CHICAGO: Chas. P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal.

THE delayed shipments of European seeds have been coming to hand heavily in the past few days and everyone is busy.

MANY in the trade are looking for the grower who makes the best delivery on 1904 contract bean orders previous to closing orders for 1905.

A SIGN of prosperity in the seed line is the enlarged catalogues being sent out by many dealers who heretofore have issued modest price lists.

FREE seeds from the government coming to a Chicago address where two occupants of the premises are in the seed business would seem to be overdoing things.

MUCH fault is being found with the percentage of germination of field corn samples that have been sent out. This is surprising, as the 1904 product has been considered a well cured crop.

SERIOUS delays in getting seeds out of the appraiser's store is again causing trouble in the filling of rush orders. Up to the present the delay has not been so bad as last year, however.

THE oldest appeal still pending in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York is one of J. M. Thorburn & Co. against a customs decision of December 10, 1890, under the tariff act of 1883, relating to an importation of bulbs.

THE Norwalk, O., Chronicle of January 12 contains a column article descriptive of the development of the business of C. S. Clark, of Wakeman, who is stated to handle yearly about 175,000 bushels of seed corn. Burpee's White Evergreen, a novelty of 1904, originated with Mr. Clark.

THE A. A. Berry Seed Co., Clarinda, Ia., has been organized as a stock company and incorporated with $75,000 capital, fully paid in; A. A. Berry, president and general manager, and W. C. Affeld, secretary. Business is in a most prosperous condition and has a bright outlook. They are extensive growers of vine seeds, sweet corn and onion sets, also large handlers of grass seeds.

At the meeting of the executive committee held at the Grand hotel, Cincinnati, January 10, it was decided to hold the next convention of the American Seed Trade Association at Alexandria Bay, N. Y., June 20 to 22. There were present President C. N. Page, A. H. Goodwin, G. B. McVay, Albert McCullough, J. Chas. McCullough, J. G. Peppard and Secretary C. E. Kendel. Hotel arrangements will be announced later.

THE Chicago and Northwestern Railroad will run a "seed special" over its lines in Iowa, beginning the tour of the state within a month. The train will be known as the "Corn Gospel Special," and is so fitted out that lectures can be given on it to the farmers and others who wish to learn about the testing of seed. Prof. P. G. Holden, of the state agricultural college at Ames, will be in charge, and will do most of the lecturing during the stops at stations.

PROPAGATING KALMIA.

How and when can cuttings from the rhododendron or mountain laurel be successfully propagated, or will the attempt to propagate prove profitable?

M. J. S.

The mountain laurel, Kalmia latifolia, and its varieties are not easily propagated from cuttings. The best method and that usually practiced by nurserymen, is to gather and sow the seeds as soon as ripe in a cool greenhouse, either in pots or pans of light, peaty compost with plenty of sand added. Prick the seedlings off into other flats when large enough to handle and when sufficiently hardened plant outdoors. Grafting of special varieties on seedlings of Kalmia latifolia is sometimes done and layering is also practiced to some extent, but the general method is to raise them from seed.

FRANK HAMILTON.

The accompanying portrait is that of Frank Hamilton who, as was recently announced on this page, has associated himself with the Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, N. Y., having direct charge of the nursery and landscape department. Mr. Hamilton began his horticultural career with the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y. After having been there for a while he went into business for himself, having a large establishment on Staten Island, growing plants and flowers for the New York market. After that he was with the Pierson Co. for several years as a traveling salesman, representing them among the trade in eastern states. He also has had an extended experience in their rose houses, and was for some time foreman of their Scarboro nursery, so that he has an all-round experience in the trade, followed by several years in the New York parks. At Central park he had a large experience in improving work done some years before, and as head gardener for the Department of the Bronx he had charge of all planting and construction work, having 800 men in his charge. He has many friends, and will be a strong addition to the corporation in which he has now acquired an interest.

Frank Hamilton.

The Market.

While business is showing a considerable improvement over the last two weeks, yet it is not quite up to standard. The demand in all lines is weak, but prospects now point toward a slight improvement. The supply has been very heavy in all lines and as a rule the quality did not average up very well. The price consequently has been low. The best quality of goods sold out as a rule.

Beauty has been in pretty heavy supply, especially long ones. Other varieties of red roses did somewhat better. White roses were in best demand. Carnations came in by the thousands and sold in many cases at summer prices.

The present outlook is very much better. The supply has gone down considerably and prices are consequently advancing. The demand, too, is somewhat heavier.

Various Notes.

Owing to the very severe weather last Saturday but few members of the Florists' Society were on hand, so a meeting was not held. The next meeting will be the annual rose show on February 11. This usually brings forth a very good show and indications are that this year will be no exception.

The carnation show at Chicago is now the main subject of conversation and when the time comes there will be about ten in the party from here. Very few flowers will be sent from this city. It seems to be an off year for the growers here, but those that do go will be well worth seeing.

Julius Baer has leased two stores located not far from his present quarters, and, after fitting them up in first-class style, will move there.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society held its sixth annual dinner, and by far the best of its career, on January 11, seventy members and guests participating, some from Red Bank and New York and up the river. Splendid decorations, including the Tarrytown fern, added to the interest of the evening. Alex. J. Guttman was present with a grand vase of Victory, none of which measured less than three and one-half inches in diameter.

President Gibson presided and turned over the responsibilities of toast-master to the district attorney of the county, Hon. Geo. C. Andrews, who was "the right man in the right place." Major Bright, of "The Christian at Work," made a most eloquent address. Ex-senator McClellan gave a fine address on "What I Know About Horticulture," devoting most of it to his experiences in California. Dr. Ely told funny stories and advocated civic improvements. Secy. Neubrand, William Scott, David McFarlane, F. R. Pierson and all the active members of the society united in their endeavors to make the visitors at home and the evening a success. Many were obliged to catch the midnight train, while "the best was yet to come." Rumor says it was long into the wee sma' hours when the last good-nights were said.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

I am sorry to say that nearly all parties pronounce business as very quiet. A few days after New Year's the bottom seemed to drop out of festivities, and little social gatherings and dinner parties demanding but a few dozen roses or carnations is what we have to depend on. Carnations are plentiful, violets more than abundant, but good roses not at all overdone. Tulips are just arriving and welcomed as a change. The weather has been against business and that seems general. Every variety is served up once a week. You need skates for the sidewalk on Monday, snow shoes on Tuesday, waterproof rubbers on Wednesday, Eskimo apparel for Thursday, umbrellas on Friday, a mixture of the foregoing on Saturday and such a howling blizzard on Sunday that you can't possibly attend divine service, so you make your wife attend just to keep up appearances.

Various Notes.

We had a well attended meeting of the club last Friday and the final details of the Sweeney flower show were completed. The company gives the Florists' Club $1,100 in premiums. It will be held four days, commencing Tuesday, April 11. The classes are almost entirely devoted to such plants as we offer for Easter and there is a chance for everybody. Surely this ought to bring out a large display. Every local grower as well as store man should be represented. Charlie Keitsch is manager, so all looks fair.

We had the pleasure of talking over the phone yesterday with E. G. Hill. Wonder what he thought of our delightful climate? We would have much liked to see the good man and his Richmond rose. Mr. Clucas, Jr., was also in town and that excellent commercial traveler (drummer is too vulgar a word in this case) Harry Bunyard; "God bless me, oh, yes indeed!"

I forgot to mention that at our club meeting Dan'l B. Long was appointed a committee of one to solicit subscriptions to the McKinley memorial fund and he has promised to go at the work promptly and with his usual energy. Mr. Altick will think Buffalo has been very negligent over his worthy object, but in truth the one expected to take up the work has had all the vim and energy taken out of him for the past three months. W. S.

EASTER LILIES.

I have a lot of Easter lilies in 6-inch pots, from five to seven inches high, very thrifty looking. They have been kept in 60 to 65 degrees night temperature, bottom of pots full of roots. I want to have them in bloom by or a little before Easter. Shall I shift into 7-inch pots and keep at the same temperature, or shall I increase the temperature and shall I use liquid manure? Is bone meal any advantage mixed with soil? H. M. M.

Considering the late date of Easter you have your lilies too far advanced. It is not a good plan to reduce the temperature on these lilies, as they will often become stunted. The only time I like to remove them to a much lower temperature is after the buds are turning white. They will open then in a very cool house. However, in your case, don't let the night temperature exceed 55 to 58 degrees or they will assuredly be too early. Don't shift any more. A 6-inch pot is plenty large enough. Weak liquid manure once a week will help later on and a half-inch mulching of good loam with some bone meal added will help. Don't apply that until March 1. W. S.

TOO LITTLE HEAT.

I have a house 15x108, eight feet to ridge, new and tight, no glass on sides and in only one end. The piping consists of one 4-inch flow on the plates, crossing the house and supplying three 3-inch returns under the benches. These empty into a 3½-inch pipe to the boiler. The flow starts eighteen inches above the boiler and has a rise of twenty inches. There is an expansion tank six feet above the boiler and a vent pipe at the highest point, farthest from the boiler. The boiler consists of four sections, fifty-six inches high, twenty-eight inches wide and twenty-six inches deep. The grate is 18x18 inches. The chimney is twelve inches in diameter and twenty feet high. The circulation is good, the draught strong, but the pipes do not get hot. The heater is said to have a capacity for 700 feet of radiation. What is the trouble? G. O. K.

I see no criticism of the system of piping used. The one point which is not clear is the amount of heating surface in the boiler. The grate surface is sufficient to provide heat for ninety feet of heating surface with hard coal. The boiler, to supply 700 feet of radiation, should have at least ninety feet of heating surface, and even more if it is a cast-iron boiler. If soft coal is used it should have about 180 feet of heating surface for the grate area, which would make the boiler capable of carrying about 1,400 feet of radiation. The kind of fuel used and the make of the boiler are not stated, so it is only possible to guess at the fault, which is probably too small an amount of heating surface in the boiler. The pipe in the house as at present arranged, gives about 400 feet of radiation, which with a good boiler should be sufficient for carnations and cool stuff generally.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

There is quite a dearth of flowers just at present. The only thing that saves the stores from a general look of emptiness is that there is only a very limited demand for the small amount of stock the retailers have to offer. Business, outside of an occasional funeral order, is very dull. Social happenings of any importance are not numerous this month. We are beginning to have a considerable supply of bulbous stock to select from, and mums are daily becoming scarcer and of poorer quality. Carnations and roses are about equal to the demand. The prices have not changed for several weeks, and I do not think they will for another month yet. I saw some fine Enchantress and Prosperity today from the greenhouses of P. C. Meyer & Co., at Burlingame, that cost the retailers 75 cents per dozen, but they were extra stock and the majority of growers do not receive over 50 cents per dozen for these varieties. Freesias, daffodils, tulips, Roman hyacinths and narcissi are plentiful and of very slow sale. Violets are about equal to the demand and cost the dealers from 75 cents to $1 per dozen bunches.

Various Notes.

The building formerly occupied by Geo. B. Jones, on Sutter street, near Grant avenue, has been torn down and Mr. Jones has retired from business. He is one of the pioneers in the trade in San Francisco and has been very successful during his entire career of over twenty-five years.

Fred. Seulberger has been appointed horticultural inspector for Alameda county, vice P. J. Keller, who has been retired by the board of supervisors.

We regret to chronicle the death of Louis Becanne, son of John Becanne, the Alameda florist. Mr. Becanne was 24 years of age and had been in delicate health for some time.

A. Galloway, of Fruitvale, is cutting some fine white carnations from a sport he has raised from the pink, Marquis. It bids fair to be a valuable acquisition, and Mr. Galloway is giving it a thorough test.

Six local firms will make exhibits of seeds and nursery stock at the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland this year.

Over in Oakland the Board of Trade has been exhibiting during the past week several branches of Royal Ann cherries that have just ripened on the grounds of O. Luning, near Alden. How is that for California climate?

J. Firgens, of the firm of Firgens & Schmitz, Stockton, is in town on a short visit. G.

EASTERN CARNATIONS.

"I am tired of paying so much for my experience," remarked one of our largest carnation growers to me this week, when asked whether he was going to plant for the coming season any of the new eastern varieties of pinks that are being offered for the first time to the wholesale dealers. "I have lost considerable money during the past five years in trying to keep up with the new sorts,

Araucaria Excelsa,

From 2¼-inch pots, extra strong plants with 2 and 3 tier, 6 to 8 inches high, at $16 per 100.

Araucaria Imbricata,

From 2-inch pots, 4 to 6 inches high, $10 per 100 and from 2½-inch pots 6 to 8 inches high, $12.50 per 100.

give the retailers something different each season and grow kinds that every forcer of carnations was not sending in to the stores. I am in the future only going to fill my houses with such kinds as have been tested by other growers around San Francisco and are known to produce paying crops of marketable flowers under our conditions. In other words, I am going to let some other fellow experiment for a while, and I am going to profit by his experience.''

He pointed to a house 30x170 feet, as he spoke, that was planted to six pink and red varieties of last year's introduction, containing about 4,000 plants, and continued:

''I spent about $500 for the stock that is planted in this house, and up to date I have not been able to get back the first cost of the stock. Many varieties that are successes in the east do not come up to the mark under our conditions. I purchased one variety on the description of the introducer and, although the plants are rank growers, the flowers are not seen very often, and I shall throw it out. The public seemed to be tiring of Mrs. Lawson, and I sent for 1,000 of another sort that was said to be good in every way, but I have only been able to get a few dozen blooms that were not so badly burst as to be unsalable. From another firm I purchased 1,000 young plants of a new scarlet, but they developed such a fondness for stem-rot, which I had never had in my houses before, that I threw them all out. I am going to confine myself to the older varieties in future. Of course I have the fun of satisfying myself as to the merits of the various kinds but, as I am out of pocket considerably, even if we do now and then find a gem, after the fashion of the man from Missouri, 'You will have to show me.'' Club Meeting.

I wish to correct my notice in last week's issue pertaining to the flower show to be held by the Florists' Club, on January 23. At the last meeting it was thought best to postpone this meeting until February 13, the second Monday in the month. This was done so it would not conflict with the convention at Chicago. The new rose, Richmond, was exhibited at this meeting and created favorable comment. Robert George, of Painesville, was the custodian of the valuable exhibit. A special committee, consisting of Isaac Kennedy, Robert George and Michael Bloy were appointed to pass upon its merits. They reported as follows:

That it is a decided acquisition to the red rose class, an improvement on Liberty, being a freer producer, lighter in color, or a more pleasing shade, with delightful fragrance, not too heavy in foliage. Being able to grow in a Bride and Maid temperature is considered a great advantage and it is said to be a most prolific bloomer.

It was decided to make this committee permanent, with the additional names of Adam Graham and John Kelly, to pass upon and issue certificates of merit and honorable mention for seedling carnations and roses or any novelties exhibited before the club, to be guided by the scales adopted by the carnation, rose and chrysanthemum societies.

It is a very profitable variety on account of it being so very late; begins blooming December 20, continuing to middle of January; color, salmon pink; large and full; strong grower, three to four feet, foliage dark green leaves, well up to bloom, and a good keeper. On account of its lateness, it is bound to be exceedingly valuable.

PERRY FLORISTS' ASSOCIATION.

The Perry Florists' Association is an organization of a number of florists through Iowa and southern Minnesota, which holds periodical meetings at the establishments of its members. The mid-winter meeting for this season was held January 10, 11 and 12 at the greenhouses of W. S. Hall, at Osage, Ia. As has been the rule at the meetings of the association, much of value in a business way was learned, aside from the social features of the three days' session. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, A. N. Kinsman, Austin, Minn.; secretary and treasurer, W. S. Hall, Osage, Ia.

There were a considerable number of exhibits, the discussion of which was a most interesting feature of the meeting. J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., sent twenty-five blooms of its new red carnation, Robt. Craig, which were very highly commended. The C. C. Pollworth Co., of Milwaukee, sent some very fine Chatenay roses and good stevia.

The next meeting will take place in July at the establishment of W. T. Symonds, at Decorah, Ia.

DENVER.

Cut flower trade has been good since holidays. Roses are rather scarce, with a good supply of carnations and everything used up pretty clean.

The march of progress in improvements the coming summer is cropping out already and some of the growers are laying plans for the construction of several houses for the cultivation of Beauties and other roses.

The start made by an eastern man here during the holidays in a flower store results in failure. Inexperience in the business and the lack of good help were the causes.

The prospect of one of our seed merchants branching out into the floral department is good. He thinks the association of flowers will be more congenial than parrots and goldfish.

GREAT DIVIDE.

WE are much pleased with the REVIEW and would not be without it.—WHITTAKER BROS., Cornwall, Ont.

WHILE we would all like to curtail expenses, I believe it is no economy to try to get along without the REVIEW.—GEO. D. DUDLEY, New Market, N. H.

WE DESIRE TO ANNOUNCE to the trade that this season we will disseminate Three of our Seedling Carnations

BEATRICE will perhaps not displace Enchantress, but it will pay you well to grow it for a more moderate priced bloom. It is not quite so large, but it is much freer and more profitable. It is just what you want in large quantities for your every-day trade. Plenty large enough and the color is beautiful, both under artificial as well as by daylight. Fine form and a good keeper. Planted by August 1st comes into full crop September 1st, and never lets up; no cropper. Long, strong stems and does not burst.

INDIANA MARKET is a fine all-the-year-round white, and by far the most profitable white we have today.

FLAMBEAU is the best warm weather red, and hard to beat in winter, too.

All three won Certificates of Merit November 15, 1904, State Society of Indiana Florists.

$10.00 per 100; $80.00 per 1000. Will send you 100 of each of these three for $24.00.

RED SPORT (Of Maceo.)

This new "Bread and Butter" commercial brilliant "Crane" Red Carnation, now in its fourth year, has the hardy constitution of General Maceo, with a stronger heavier growth, longer and stiffer stem and a larger flower. Growing under the same conditions and in the same house with Flamingo and Estelle it has produced four times as many blooms as the former and twice as many blooms as the latter. The color is as good as Estelle and the bloom brings as much as does Estelle at its best. Every flower is of a uniform brilliant red, perfectly double with an ideal calyx, in fact we never saw a split one.

Red Sport is perfectly healthy, an easy variety to grow, an early and continuous bloomer, throwing its heaviest cuts around the Christmas holidays and during the Winter months when red is in demand. Red Sport will keep longer and travel farther than any other red carnation, and will prove a bonanza to the grower who does a shipping business. If the scarcity of reds in the market that now exists continues Red Sport will pay better to the square foot of bench than any other variety of any color to date. Every florist who has seen Red Sport growing has placed an order for rooted cuttings, which tells the tale. All our stock is sold up to January 25th. Orders filled in strict rotation from that date on. Price, 12 for $1.50, 25 for $2.50, 50 for $4.00 all post paid. $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000, by express. We guarantee all cuttings to be well rooted and to arrive in good condition.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

This week again sees this city the center of a severe storm. Snow has fallen and the thermometer ranges below zero, thereby causing a lull in the market. A very few receptions were held the past week, but there was a large amount of funeral work. Roses are beginning to come in of good quality. Some fine carnations are to be seen and prices are a trifle lower than last week. Quite a number of receptions are on the books for next week, including the annual meeting of the implement dealers, who furnish quite an amount of work for the florists. When the weather breaks things will brighten up a bit and we look for good business.

Various Notes.

Samuel Murray will have the largest decoration of the week, having the Parlin-Orendorff display in honor of the visiting implement dealers. Sam has had this decoration for a number of years but says that this year's display is far in excess of any he has had before.

James Payne has some fine stock growing for the spring trade and reports business fairly good.

Mrs. Duss has sold out to Mann & Chiles. Mr. Mann formerly worked for A. F. Barbe and is well up in floral work.

Miss Jewell reports very good business the past week, chiefly funeral work.

D. Freudenthal has been making the rounds the past week among the growers, buying up stock. He reports trade as quiet at present in his new location.

John Schneider has closed up his business on East Eleventh street, but will continue at the old stand on Walnut.

Several of the leading stores were closed Sunday and it is hoped that before long all will close on that day, as enough business can be done during the week to justify closing.

Ed. Ellsworth, of Kellogg's, has patented a plant box for carrying palms for decorative purposes. A wagon-load of palms were enclosed in these boxes and taken out with the mercury hovering around zero. They were successfully carried in an open wagon a distance of over a mile and were not injured.

Nelson Jarrett is staying close to home these days and has some fine stock coming on for the spring trade.

Mrs. M. A. Biggam, Leavenworth, reports business as fine in that town and is putting some good stuff on the market

What a few Say, All That Use It Say.

Montclair, N. J.—I think your The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder is by far the most effective and satisfactory Fumigator on the market, not only as regards its results, but also in the methods of using, and I have gladly recommended it to my friends. The Sprinkling Kind Tobacco Powder is equally good and effective. H. BRADLEY.

Marion, Ind.—Your Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder has given me more satisfaction than any other kind of insecticide, and I have used all the latest inventions. I have used it now for two years and think it is the satest, cheapest and easiest to handle on the market. GUNNAR TEILMANN.

Troy, N. Y.—Enclosed please find two dollars; ship at once 100 pounds The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder. It was a pleasure the freedom we enjoyed last season from insects through the use of your powder. JOHN H. DUKE.

Wallingford, Conn.—Please send me by freight one hundred pounds The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder. I find nothing better. I have used it for four years, and find no injury to blossoms. GEO. H. ROWDEN.

A FREE trial five-pound bag will cost you nothing more than the express charges on it. The trial bag will prove our assertion that it is the most effective, cleanest and quickest as well as the cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with. All aphis killed in one night—our booklet tells of it; we mail one on request.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society held the second of its regular monthly meetings on January 4, on the premises of Felix Mense, who has granted this as a place of meeting till a permanent one be decided upon. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was a good attendance which would seem thus to augur well for a successful career to this newly organized society. President Harrison occupied the chair. The chief business at the meeting was the adoption of by-laws for the society, submitted by the executive committee. Some lively discussions followed.

SEED SOWING.

When is the proper time to sow aster and tomato seed in a greenhouse to have early plants to set out? Is twelve inches the proper distance to have a bench for growing the same from the glass? My house is an even span running east and west. If you will kindly answer same in an early number you will oblige.

R. P.

If you have plenty of room you can sow both asters and tomatoes about the first of March. In the case of asters, this would be a long way too early except for a very early crop and of late it seems the asters that can be cut in September and early October are in most demand and bring the highest price. Tomatoes sown March 1 can be shifted on until they are in 4-inch pots and in flower at planting out time. As for distance from glass for these young plants, that is of little consequence if the house is light. The only advantage of being near the glass for any plant is that they get a purer and better circulation of air.

TO-BAK-INE

FUMIGATING POWDER.

This powder contains a definite amount of nicotine and will be found uniform at all times. Slow burning. Sure death to Aphis.

TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER has kept down all signs of Aphis in carnation and rose houses. It leaves no odor on the flowers and has not in the slightest hurt either flower or foliage on the roses, as does burning tobacco stems.—WILLIAM SCOTT, Buffalo.

WE FIND TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER very satisfactory. We would like 100 lbs. shipped at once.—ARLIN & ARLIN, Clyde, Ohio.

Superior Boilers are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, TREANOR & RETTIC.

What a Few Say, All That Use It Say.

Montclair, N. J.—I think your The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder is by far the most effective and satisfactory Fumigator on the market, not only as regards its results, but also in the methods of using, and I have gladly recommended it to my friends. The Sprinkling Kind Tobacco Powder is equally good and effective. H. BRADLEY.

Marion, Ind.—Your Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder has given me more satisfaction than any other kind of insecticide, and I have used all the latest inventions. I have used it now for two years and think it is the safest, cheapest and easiest to handle on the market. GUNNAR TEILMANN.

Troy, N. Y.—Enclosed please find two dollars; ship at once 100 pounds The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder. It was a pleasure the freedom we enjoyed last season from insects through the use of your powder. JOHN H. DUKE.

Wallingford, Conn.—Please send me by freight one hundred pounds The Fumigating Kind Tobacco Powder. I find nothing better. I have used it for four years, and find no injury to blossoms. GEO. H. ROWDEN.

A FREE trial five-pound bag will cost you nothing more than the express charges on it. The trial bag will prove our assertion that it is the most effective, cleanest and quickest as well as the cheapest (10 cents per 100-foot house) article to fumigate with. All aphis killed in one night—our booklet tells of it; we mail one on request.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society held the second of its regular monthly meetings on January 4, on the premises of Felix Mense, who has granted this as a place of meeting till a permanent one be decided upon. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was a good attendance which would seem thus to augur well for a successful career to this newly organized society. President Harrison occupied the chair. The chief business at the meeting was the adoption of by-laws for the society, submitted by the executive committee. Some lively discussions followed.

SEED SOWING.

When is the proper time to sow aster and tomato seed in a greenhouse to have early plants to set out? Is twelve inches the proper distance to have a bench for growing the same from the glass? My house is an even span running east and west. If you will kindly answer same in an early number you will oblige.

R. P.

If you have plenty of room you can sow both asters and tomatoes about the first of March. In the case of asters, this would be a long way too early except for a very early crop and of late it seems the asters that can be cut in September and early October are in most demand and bring the highest price. Tomatoes sown March 1 can be shifted on until they are in 4-inch pots and in flower at planting out time. As for distance from glass for these young plants, that is of little consequence if the house is light. The only advantage of being near the glass for any plant is that they get a purer and better circulation of air.

W. S.

DAYTON, O.—It is reported that a big plant is soon to be erected here by Eaton capital, for carnation growing.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

While we started in with twelve or fifteen inches of snow January 9, and had a couple of days of rain and slush in the middle of the week, winding up Friday and Saturday with nice, clear, frosty winter weather, business was fair for the week. The stores were all doing a nice business, while the receptions and weddings helped along. Randolph & McClements had a number of handsome decorations, among them several for Mrs. H. H. Westinghouse, at one of which the Westinghouse rose was used on the table, making a very beautiful decoration.

Various Notes.

John Murchie, of Sharon, and James Walker, of Walker & McLean, Youngstown, O., visited the Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co. the past week and while in the city Mr. Murchie showed several of his new seedling carnations; one, a bright red, was very favorably commended.

Walter Breitenstein was out canoeing one day last week, trying his hand at dodging cakes of ice in the Allegheny.

A. W. Smith is forcing very fine lilac and yellow trumpet narcissus.

L. I. Neff is back at business after a siege of grip contracted during the holidays. Among those who are still ill are Mrs. E. A. Williams, Wm. Flemm and John Baldinger.

We hear a good deal of talk about the Carnation Convention. Already the following have declared their intention of going: I. S. Crall, Monongahela; Mr. DeMuth, Connellsville; Mr. Warrick, Washington; John Murchie, Sharon; Mr. Walker, Youngstown; John L. Wyland, Fred Burki, T. P. Langhans, W. A. Clarke, J. B. Murdoch and James L. Wyland, and no doubt there will be several others by starting time. This delegation expects to go via Richmond, Ind., stopping over there one day. The P. C. C. & St. L. is the most direct route, and we shall probably all go that way. The stop-over at Richmond will necessitate purchasing mileage, as the one and one-third fare tickets are not good for a stop-over. We shall leave this city Monday evening, arriving at Richmond early Tuesday, leaving Richmond Tuesday evening for Chicago. Any florists from this section who desire to join this party will please communicate with T. P. Langhans, 504 Liberty avenue, Pittsburg.

Marshall Anderson, of A. W. Smith's, met with a serious accident Monday morning on a Mt. Washington trolley car via Tunnel. We all hope for a speedy recovery. Hoo-Hoo.

Horticultural Architects and Builders.
West Side Ave., JERSEY CITY, N. J.

FLAT IRON RAFTER TYPE.

While the same in general outline as the ordinary flat rafter type of greenhouse that has been on the market for years, yet our construction is so far improved in every detail it is far from ordinary—it is in a class by itself.

We furnish it in two styles for commercial and private use, both ¾ and even span. The commercial style shown in the illustration has our galvanized "U" bar eaves plate and is supported on galvanized iron foot pieces set in concrete.

The style for private use is provided with cast-iron sills set on brick walls and is furnished with gutter at eaves line.

FLAT IRON RAFTER TYPE OF GREENHOUSE.
ERECTED FOR MR. JEFF DOREMUS, MADISON, N. J.

SASH BAR TYPE.

We manufacture this type of house in several grades from the low priced all cypress grade to the highest grade of combination wood and iron.

The house shown in the illustration is composed of our highest grade and consists of our galvanized "U" bar eaves supported on galvanized angle iron side posts with foot pieces bedded in concrete. The roof is supported on iron columns and angle iron purlins, making a strong durable house at a reasonable price.

It stands next to our flat rafter type in stanchness and durability.

Our lower priced grades of sash bar houses are manufactured with just the same care and attention to every detail.

HIGHEST GRADE OF SASH BAR TYPE OF GREENHOUSE.
ERECTED FOR MR. A. L. THORNE, FLUSHING, N. Y.

RIDGE AND FURROW TYPE.

We manufacture this type of house in all our constructions and of all widths of span.

The range shown in illustration consists of our highest grade sash bar with galvanized "U" bar eaves and galvanized angle iron posts.

It is provided with our galvanized "V" iron center gutter arranged to catch all water of condensation on under side of glass.

It is absolutely dripless and is without doubt the most perfect center gutter yet presented. It is supported on galvanized iron pipe columns which are bedded in concrete.

RIDGE AND FURROW TYPE OF GREENHOUSE.
ERECTED FOR F. R. & P. M. PIERSON, SCARBOROUGH, N. Y.

We also manufacture and furnish self-locking sash opening apparatus, hotbed sash and frames, all kinds of benches, "Pierson" boilers and everything required for erecting and heating greenhouses.

Estimates furnished for houses erected complete or for material ready to erect.

RICHMOND

That It is the Best Red Forcing Variety yet Produced.

1st. It is of strong and rapid growth, more vigorous than any other forcing variety in commerce.

2nd. It comes to perfection without special care or culture and can be grown in the same soil and temperature and with the same treatment given to Bride and Maid.

3rd. It ships perfectly, as it can be cut very tight and develops as well off as on the bush.

4th. Has very near the same tone of color as Liberty, with more scarlet and does not blue with age.

5th. This variety is nearly a pure tea, being seeded from LADY BATTERSEA, fertilized by LIBERTY, and as a result has shown no tendency toward going dormant in mid-winter, at which time the variety is at its very best.

6th. Produces freely throughout the year, long pointed buds on tall straight stems with elegant dark foliage.

7th. Is as easy to root, and grafts as readily as Bride or Maid.

8th. Has as delicious a fragrance as American Beauty.

Was awarded the silver cup at the World's Fair for best seedling rose and a special silver cup at Chicago for best seedling. Prices, own root—100 plants for $30; 250 for $70; 1000 for $250. 500 at 1000 rate.

ROSALIND ORR ENGLISH

OUR P.NK SEEDLING from Mme. Chatenay is unapproached in color; the bud is pointed, quite full, borne on long slender stems, beautifully set with foliage, free in growth and bloom; the flower is very beautiful from its earliest bud form till fully expanded. Was awarded certificate of merit at the Chicago Show; $25 00 per 100, $200 per 1000. Both these Varieties are easy to propagate and easy to grow. Come and see them at home.

CARNATIONS

The best big-flowered, general-purpose Scarlet Carnation now before the trade is CARDINAL, color superb, texture perfect, in vigorous health and of splendid habit. Also FIANCEE and F. BURKI. All three at $12 00 per hundred, $100 per thousand.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

Among the new varieties which we had on trial for this year are some magnificent sorts, nine of which have been awarded certificates, viz.: Clementine Touset, the big early white Chadwick, October 8; Dr. Galloway, mid-season incurving white; Mlle. Jeannie Nonin, very late white, winner of the Sweepstakes and Silver Cup at Chicago as best New Mum of the year. These three sorts are marvelously fine commercial varieties in pure white, NONIN probably ranking as the finest Mum extant, regardless of date of blooming. Besides these are: Reveil de Begles, early commercial yellow; Roi d' Italie, early commercial yellow; Anna Debono, Mme. E. Lemoine, Prefet Bonoourt, Souv d' Calvat Pere, four grand exhibition whites. Besides these we have: The Wells-Pockett Set for 1905; The Australians of the year; The Marquis of Pins Set, M Calvat's Fine Sorts, the best of Nonin's, Bruant's and Rozain's.

All at 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100, except Mrs. Wm. Duckham, which is 75c each; $7.50 per doz.; $50.00 per 100

CARNATIONS!

NOVELTIES OF THE SEASON

VARIEGATED LAWSON—This variety, introduced by us this season, is sure to meet with popular favor. It is a sport from MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON, pure ivory white, with delicate carmine pencilings. Mr. W. N. Craig, an authority on everything pertaining to horticulture, states that he believes this will outbloom the favorite, MRS. M. A. PATTEN, two to one. For some reason or other, the stem seems to be longer than that of MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON, and the flowers are less inclined to burst. It is a beautiful variegated variety, and one that is sure to be in demand on account of its delicate pencilings. It is superb in every respect. Our exclusive purchase of this variety has created a sensation in the daily press of the country. Per hundred, $12.00; per thousand, $100.00.

FIANCEE—The Queen of Pink Carnations—In a class by itself. Magnificent flowers; strictly fancy in every respect. Per hundred, $12.00; per thousand, $100.00.

CARDINAL—Bright Cardinal or Crimson-Scarlet. Per hundred, $12.00; per thousand, $100.00.

FRED BURKI—Recommended as an extra free-blooming white variety and a claimant for popular favor. Per hundred, $12.00; per thousand, $100.00.

THE BEST OF LAST SEASON'S NOVELTIES AND OLDER STANDARD SORTS

WHITE LAWSON—We consider this variety, which we introduced last season, the Finest White Carnation ever sent out. It has given great satisfaction. When left on the plants until fully developed, the flowers are much larger than MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON. Nothing excels it for freedom of bloom, fine keeping qualities, and general all-round value. We believe that this will occupy among White Carnations the same place that MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON does among pinks. Remember that we are headquarters for it. Splendid stock ready for immediate delivery. Per hundred, $7.00; per thousand, $60.00.

DAHEIM—A fine crimson introduced by us last year, with the style and habit of MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON; might be called a CRIMSON LAWSON; as it has all the characteristics of that variety as far as freedom of flowering, habit of growth, etc., are concerned. It has grand, stiff stems, calyx never bursts, and it is a free and abundant bloomer, developing very quickly. We believe this to be the best all-round Crimson Carnation. Per hundred, $6.00; per thousand, $50.00.

LADY BOUNTIFUL—A magnificent white of last season's introduction. Per hundred, $6.00; per thousand, $50.

ENCHANTRESS—This magnificent Carnation is unequaled for size, beautiful color light, silvery pink and freedom of bloom. It brings the very highest market prices, and is in great demand. Per hundred, $4.00; per thousand, $35.00.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN—This grand variegated Carnation has given splendid satisfaction. Per hundred, $6.00; per thousand, $50.00.

MRS. THOS. W. LAWSON—The Standard Dark Pink—Per hundred, $3.00; per thousand, $25.00.

PROSPERITY—A magnificent fancy sort, entirely distinct from others. A sterling variety. Per hundred, $3.00; Per thousand, $25.00.

We are also pleased to announce that we have been appointed distributing agent for the sale of VICTORY, and that all orders for this variety should be sent direct to us. We are now prepared to book orders for this variety for delivery, Spring, 1906. We have watched this Carnation for some time, and believe that it is the best scarlet ever offered, with good stems, flowers of the largest size; a magnificent keeper and shipper, and an exceedingly free and early bloomer. While the flowers of this variety are of the largest size, and it will rank in the fancy class, its freedom of bloom and general good qualities will make it a bread-and-butter scarlet. There is a great demand for a good scarlet at the holiday time, and the flowers of this variety brought 25 cents each last Christmas, which is an indication of its popularity.

RED SPROT } OF MACEO { The NEW "BREAD and BUTTER" Brilliant Red Commercial Carnation

1214 F. Street, N. W.

A. B. DAVIS & SON, Purcellville, Va.

GENTLEMEN:—Please make our order for rooted cuttings of RED SPORT 2000 instead of 1000.

The blooms you sent in today were certainly very fine. We have been watching this promising new red for three years and the more we see of it and the longer we sell it over the counter the better we like it.

We do not make a practice of going in very strong on the new varieties the first year they are sent out, but after seeing RED SPORT growing and blooming at your place last Tuesday, we are convinced it is a great Christmas carnation, and an all around money maker, and we wish to increase our order as stated above.

Yours very truly, A. GUDE & BRO.

CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 8, 1904.

A. B. DAVIS & SON, Purcellville, Va

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter and RED SPORT of Maceo came to hand Friday. We waited to see how carnations would keep before writing you.

The color and keeping qualities are the best and if it blooms as freely as Maceo it is a good one. Very respectfully yours,

BASSETT & WASHBURN.

KENNETT SQUARE, PA., October 14, 1904.

A. B. DAVIS & SON, Purcellville, Va.

DEAR SIRS:—Yours 12th at hand and I will be glad to include your RED SPORT of Maceo in our list and believe it will meet with good sale. You may book my order for 2500 of them to start with. I think you have a good thing and congratulate you.

Very truly, WM. SWAYNE.

WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY ABOUT RED SPORT:

This new "Bread and Butter" commercial brilliant Red Carnation, now in its fourth year, has the hardy constitution of Gen. Maceo, with a stronger, heavier growth, longer and stiffer stem and larger flower. Growing under the same conditions and in the same house with Flamingo and Estelle, it has produced four times as many flowers as the former and twice as many as the latter. The color is as good as Estelle and the bloom brings as much as does Estelle at its best. Every flower is of a uniform, brilliant red, perfectly double, with an ideal calyx; in fact we have never seen a split one.

RED SPORT is perfectly healthy, an easy variety to grow, an early and continuous bloomer, throwing its heaviest cuts around the Christmas Holidays and during the winter months, when red is in demand. RED SPORT will keep longer and travel farther than any other red carnation and will prove a bonanza to growers doing a shipping business. If the scarcity of reds in the market that now exists continues, RED SPORT will pay better to the square foot of bench room than any other variety of any color to date.

Every florist who has seen RED SPORT growing has placed an order for rooted cuttings, which tells the tale.

All our rooted cuttings are sold until January 25. Orders filled in strict rotation from above date on. Prices, 12 for $1.50; 25 for $2.50; 50 for $4.00 postpaid. $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000 by express. We guarantee cuttings to be well rooted and to arrive in good condition.

THE CHICAGO CONVENTION

The American Carnation Society Holds a Successful Meeting and a Splendid Exhibition.

President, Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.
Vice-President, A. H. Dunlop, Toronto, Ont.
Secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.
Treasurer, Fred. Dorner, Jr., Lafayette, Ind.

PLACE OF MEETING FOR 1906, BOSTON, MASS.

What can we do to propitiate the God of Storms? Since time immemorial the weather man has been safe in forecasting the choicest samples of cold and snow for that spot of all others in our whole great country known to be favored by the American Carnation Society for its annual meeting. This year was no exception to the rule, but thanks to favoring train schedules no exhibitor was so late as to be debarred from staging his stock save Richard Witterstaetter, whose train was behind a wreck due to the storm and who arrived at 1:15, six hours late, with one of the grandest lots of blooms ever brought to an exhibition.

Most of the exhibits came in on the early morning trains, a couple of hours late, but by 10 o'clock the exhibition hall in the Auditorium was a scene of such activity as is only witnessed when a great exhibition is to be staged under pressure of time. By 1 o'clock all was in readiness and the hall cleared for the judges, who were W. N. Rudd, Wm. Nicholson and Eugene Dailledouze, the latter taking the place of Wm. Scott, who was prevented by illness from being present.

The great banquet hall is an ideal spot for such an exhibition as that of this week and the display was worthy of the great industry which it represents. In quantity of stock exhibited it did not more than equal the record set last year at Detroit, but for quality it has never been approached. Indeed, in point of quantity nothing was left to be desired, for the room was filled. Competition was keener than ever before. In the class for 100 white there were eleven entries, but only four varieties were represented, and the quality of each exhibit was of the very best. It was noteworthy that Lady Bountiful and Wolcott defeated White Lawson. In the class for 100 pink there were eight exhibits, six of which were Mrs. Lawson, which won both premiums. Possibly more interest centered in the reds than in any other of the general classes. Five varieties were shown, first premium falling to Cardinal and second to Robert Craig. There were also five entries for the Lawson medals and five better vases were never shown in any exhibition. The gold medal fell, as last year, to Fiancee, the silver medal to Robert Craig and the bronze medal to My Maryland, the splendid white brought from so great a distance by H. Weber & Sons. The Chicago Carnation Co. was the largest exhibitor and largest prize winner.

A feature of the exhibition was the preponderance of what may be termed new sorts. Not a great many varieties which have been on the market more than a year or two were shown, and there were dozens of seedlings never before exhibited to the American Carnation Society. The attendance was up to the best previous records and the hall was comfortably filled by critical growers, the general public not being admitted.

The first business session was called to order at 8:30 Wednesday evening, by President Rudd, of the Chicago Florists' Club, who introduced Howard S. Taylor, City Prosecutor, and the Mayor's personal representative. He said that in Chicago forty-three languages are spoken, and he was delegated, and desired to be understood as welcoming the society in every one of them. Mr. Taylor spoke most entertainingly for fifteen minutes.

E. G. Hill was introduced to respond to the address of welcome and was given a greeting which bespoke his wide popularity in the trade. He spoke briefly and pledged good conduct in return for the liberties extended by the city's representative.

Mr. Rudd then introduced President James Hartshorne, who after acknowledging his reception, read his address, which was as follows:

President's Address.

What little I wish to say to you must be fragmentary, owing to my desire to avoid boring you with a tiresome address. We meet today in our fourteenth annual convention. My predecessor has said, did he believe in signs and omens, he would be fearful of the success of his, the thirteenth annual meeting. Now, I would say, were I a believer in them, I would be fearful of what was going to happen to me, as I have the honor of being your thirteenth president, but if I may judge from the many old-time faces before me and such a goodly sprinkling of enthusiastic new ones, the welfare of our society and the success of this meeting is not going to suffer on that account. Some of you have come a thousand miles or more to pay homage to, dare I say, the queen? Well, to many of us the carnation is queen of flowers.

This society has done a great work since its organization in promoting these exhibitions, offering prizes and certificates for new as well as old carnations, thus making our hybridists work harder than ever to keep pace and meet the ideals of our judges. Without this society, I am afraid we would still be plodding along in a marking-time fashion, as we were fifteen to twenty years ago. It is just fourteen years ago since the dissemination of the once great carnation, Daybreak, which really marked a new era in carnationdom. While several good varieties made a bid for our favor in the following year, it was nine years before Mr. Fisher gave us Mrs. Lawson, the next real sensation. After that came Prosperity, a variety that is still in a class by itself on account of its distinctiveness. Then came Enchantress and now Lady Bountiful and Fiancee. Therefore it looks to me from now on it is reasonable to expect a new wonder about every year.

While we cannot all raise a wonder, each individual member of this society can take some share of the credit for what has been done in advancing the carnation in general, for you support the society and the society enthuses and stimulates the hybridizer to keep pegging away.

That gentleman is now having some valuable help from the sportive tendencies of what were at one time his seedlings, but now good standard varieties. The Mrs. Lawson, for instance, has given us the White Lawson. There is no question but what this variety, now thoroughly fixed, will become a valuable standard. It originated in two or three different establishments, and I believe each one of them is conceded to be identical with the other. It was a good thing for the trade when the owners of these several sports got together and agreed on one name for all of them.

There are several other sports which I believe identical in every respect with each other, now being registered with the society under different names. This should be stopped, as it only causes confusion to the trade in general.

A matter that has been discussed pro and con in our past conventions is one relative to judging seedlings at various seasons and another one regarding the best month in which to hold our annual exhibition. Both of these are worthy of our consideration. I wish to offer a few suggestions along these lines.

I would like to have the society go on record as favoring an annual all-American flower show to be held in November and in a different city each year. I believe the time is ripe for it. Perhaps the Society of American Florists or the World's Fair Flower Show Association could be induced to take the matter up. If there were an exhibition it would enable us to see the new carnations in the fall as well as at our own grand show later in the season, without any extra expense to the American Carnation Society. We could offer our certificates there, which might be termed fall certificates, and also collect an entry fee the same as usual. This in a measure would cover the part relative to judging seedlings at different seasons and be a great benefit to both introducer and buyer of a new variety as well as to the trade in general. And then we need not be so particular as to the date for our own exhibition.

Here is another suggestion. If a certain grower has a new carnation for distribution to the trade, give him the chance of receiving our endorsement, or otherwise, of its commercial value, by applying to our president for a committee of judges or practical growers to visit his establishment and inspect the variety growing, say two or three times during the season. The committee could consist of three good men living in his, the grower's, vicinity. I believe this plan is followed by the New York Florists' Club. It would be just as easy to get the committees for this purpose as it is for the American Chrysanthemum Society to secure its several committees to meet every Saturday for two or three months.

One feature of the carnation plant we can congratulate ourselves upon more than any other, I believe, is the healthiness of the acknowledged present-day standard varieties. We do not hear so much about stem-rot, bacteria, rust, etc., as we did four or five years ago. The reason for this I lay to the fact that the hybridist has refrained from using for crossing purposes varieties that are subject to those diseases and, again, to our semi-indoor mode of culture, early planting, which I recommended in my essay at the Buffalo meeting.

Carnation White Lawson Exhibited by Breitmeyer's Sons.

The prices obtained for carnation blooms the past few years have hardly kept pace with the improvement and the quality of them. When we held our convention in this city seven years ago, fancy carnations were bringing 8 cents at the holidays and occasionally higher prices were heard of. The best varieties at that time were Jubilee, Mayor Pingree, Mrs. McBirney and Mrs. Geo. M. Bradt. The same prices were realized this season for improved varieties that were better grown, but the years between rarely saw the top figures, and yet the cost of production is much higher. The reason for this state of affairs is no doubt due to over-production, but when you take into consideration that there are a million more plants grown in this vicinity alone, producing about fourteen million a year more blooms for this, the Chicago market, we can hardly be surprised at the non-advancement of the price. Still, I doubt if we have much reason to complain, for during that period we have had no panic in the business world and no serious slump in flowerdom and the prospects for the future, I think, are encouraging. Personally I think we are on the eve of an unusually prosperous era and I trust the carnationists will reap their share of the benefits.

Since we last met in Chicago, we have been to Philadelphia, Buffalo and Baltimore, each one of these cities approximately a thousand miles from the western carnation belt, making it very difficult for growers in that vicinity to make creditable showings. In the years following the convention mentioned we went to Indianapolis, Brooklyn, Detroit and now Chicago. This is as it should be. Now let us go east again, the midddle east, or even enter new fields, as I believe great benefits are derived by our society in spreading the knowledge of our work and showing the products of our skill in any city within a reasonable shipping distance of a carnation center.

The growth of the carnation's popularity among all classes of people should be very gratifying to us, and still I believe it to be only in its infancy. One thing more than all others that will, I am sure, increase this popularity in the future, is that grand body, the Carnation League of America, with three million members, each wearing a carnation on each January 29 as a tribute to the memory of our beloved President McKinley.

We shall soon hear the report of the judges of the present exhibition. Some of us will be disappointed; others will experience those thrills of joy which victory brings. If you are a new exhibitor and are beaten, do not be discouraged. Take your defeat with good grace, find out if possible the weak points of your exhibit and return home with a determination to overcome them next year.

Before concluding, I beg of you, one and all, to attend the sessions and stay with them until each one is over, help us to get through with what business we have and make this convention what it ought to be, the greatest yet. After the sessions are over there will be plenty of time to explode your otherwise pent-up enthusiasm. That your Chicago friends will be with you and stay with you to the end is a foregone conclusion. Now to business.

At the conclusion of the president's address Secretary Herr read the report of the judges, as follows:

The Secretary's Report.

Secretary Albert M. Herr presented his annual report as follows:

Your secretary reports having issued the regular printed matter of this society during the past year and mailing the same to all the members of the society. The attempt was made of issuing the full premium list early in the fall and mailing the same at two different times, once in October and again in January. The idea was to give the advertisers in this list the advantage of a double circulation. The attempt can hardly be called a success, as it was almost impossible to get advertising and specials together in September; they were received so slowly that it came to be a rush job and an error or two in the copy was the result. These were corrected in the issue sent out in January and a few additions made to the list in the form of a supplement.

We are as yet without a permanent stenographer (that is the same stenographer for every meeting) and until we get one our reports are bound to be incomplete in some respects. We were fortunate in securing at the last meeting and for this one stenographers who have had some experience in horticultural matters, but to give us a complete report, such as this society should have, requires a stenographer who will be with us year after year, get acquainted with us, know our names, our voices and the meaning of all the terms we use.

There were during the year the usual number of complaints as to mail matter not reaching the members, in several instances four pieces having been sent the same party. In justice to myself I want to say that all regular matter, such as circulars, premium lists, etc., are sent out addressed by a machine that makes it a mechanical impossibility to miss any one.

While we are not by any means in financial straits, yet there are so many things the society could do with ample funds back of it that we should use every endeavor to increase our permanent fund and our membership as well. For the latter I would suggest a display advertisement gotten up with a cut of the front cover of our annual report and inserted in the trade papers the week the report is sent out at a cost not to exceed $5 for each paper used, and one insertion only. With the papers presented for this meeting our report ought to be a good one and a strong, pictured, good-sized advertisement ought to pay well in the increase of our membership.

Any member who has either criticism or new ideas for the advancement of this society can have the same brought before the board of directors promptly by sending them in writing to the secretary either at this meeting or at any time during the year. There is no stop to the development of the carnation, there can be none to this its patron society, but we need the assistance of every member as well as the board of directors and other officers.

Treasurer's Report.

Treasurer Fred Dorner reported the permanent fund to have contained $1,910.21 on February 20, 1904. It has since been enriched $50 by the Chicago Carnation Co. and $36 by C. W. Ward, making the present fund $1,996.21. The general fund stands as follows:

For the committee on McKinley memorial fund H. M. Altick reported slow progress until the Chicago Florists' Club took the matter up two weeks ago. Upwards of fifty of its members have agreed to give to the fund from five to twenty-five per cent of their carnation sales on January 28 or 29. C. W. Ward, E. G. Gillett, E. H. Cushman, J. A. Valentine, J. C. Vaughan and others endorsed the movement, and on motion of W. N. Rudd the society voted to place an offering of carnations on McKinley's tomb on January 29.

The nomenclature committee reported the registration of fifteen varieties with the society in the past year.

Prof. H. Hasselbring was introduced to read his paper on "Carnation Diseases," which appears elsewhere in this issue. It provoked a warm discussion and one of the most interesting ever held before the society. W. N. Rudd said he took issue with the speaker on the question of varieties running out and cited Lawson. C. W. Ward said he had reduced disease to a minimum by rational culture. He uses healthy cuttings, sterilizes sand and soil, does not plant in the field, grows cool and feeds lightly. Eugene Dailledouze said he had seen the tops taken from young stock and rooted die of stem-rot while the original plants thrived. Peter Fisher said much stem-rot is due to a check, to leaving the cuttings too long in the sand, letting them get too dry, etc. Wm. Weber said to avoid stem-rot by ventilation and the avoidance of extremes of moisture. J. A. Valentine, H. A. Bunyard, A. F. J. Baur and others participated in the discussion.

It took three-quarters of an hour of hard work to decide between Boston and Toronto for next year's convention. It took all of President Hartshorne's parliamentary skill to get the matter finally settled according to the constitution. Boston won, but had J. H. Dunlop not withdrawn Toronto's invitation for the year just as he did, she would have won.

Officers were nominated as follows: President, Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.; vice-president, J. H. Dunlop, Toronto; secretary, Albert M. Herr; treasurer, Fred Dorner, Jr.; director, Wm. Weber; judge, Wm. Nicholson.

Thursday's Morning Session.

On convening Thursday morning the first act was the appointment of G. A. Rackham, M. A. Patten and C. W. Johnson as a committee on final resolutions.

C. W. Ward, as chairman for the committee on president's address, recommended that the president's suggestions as to the registration of sports be referred to the nomenclature committee, and that instead of a great all-American flower show, a committee of three be appointed to arrange for the society's cooperation in exhibits of seedlings at several of the large autumn shows. Both recommendations were adopted, the latter subject being pretty well threshed out.

C. L. Washburn was then introduced to describe the handling of carnation blooms for long and short distance shipments. His paper will be found in another column. E. G. Gillett, in discussing the paper, offered some suggestions to growers on shipping stock to their wholesaler.

Thursday's Afternoon Session.

Fred H. Lemon was introduced at the afternoon session to read his paper on exhibition carnations which appears in full in another column. In the discussion Eugene Dailledouze said he handles the blooms as little as possible; if the ends of the stems are swabbed in soaked tissue paper they will not need re-cutting; the staging of exhibition blooms, however, begins with propagating the plant. R. Witterstaetter said a few drops of ammonia in the water aids in developing the blooms.

President Hartshorne announced C. W. Ward, Fred Lemon and R. Witterstaetter as the committee to recommend to the directors a plan for showing seedlings at the fall exhibitions.

This year's date of meeting was commended. Officers were elected as nominated and each made a brief pledge of earnest effort. On motion of J. A. Valentine the secretary was instructed to express to Wm. Scott, of Buffalo, the sympathy of the society and the hope for speedy recovery from his illness. Mr. Valentine also proposed a resolution expressive of the society's sense of loss in the death of E. N. Peirce, of Waltham. A resolution was adopted commending the work for floriculture done at the Indiana Experiment Station at Purdue. The convention then adjourned.

Thursday Evening.

The Chicago Florists' Club was the host at a banquet at the Auditorium Thursday evening. At the same time the lady visitors were entertained at supper and the theater.

CARNATION DISEASES.

BY PROF. H. HASSELBRING, OF CHICAGO.

With the extended cultivation and amelioration of the carnation, new diseases and disorders have made their appearance. Are these troubles the result of cultivation? Has the continued high culture predisposed the plants to certain forms of disease? What are the diseases that threaten the carnation today and how can they be prevented?

These are questions of ever increasing importance to the florist. Their importance will increase with every extension of carnation culture. In no other branch of horticulture is the investment and risk so great as in floriculture; no other branch of agriculture and all the related pursuits, expends so large a proportion of the returns for labor. A failure means a corresponding loss. Every factor that is likely to cause failure should be thoroughly understood.

The whole subject has received far from sufficient attention. Our experiment stations, while they have vastly furthered the interests of other branches of agriculture and horticulture, have left the whole field of florists' problems almost untouched. In this state (Illinois), containing the largest greenhouse industry in the world, our experiment station cannot legally take up any question relating to the culture of plants under glass. The florist must stand on his own feet.

In the absence of sufficient experimental investigation it will be possible to touch only the main features of the question of diseases and point out the possible future of the carnation in relation to them.

In the main the troubles with which the florist has to deal may be classed under three categories, insect enemies, physiological disorders, and fungous diseases. Fortunately, the carnation has but few insect enemies and those are so well understood that I will not take up the time to speak of them. The others are not so well understood.

Physiological Diseases.

Physiological diseases result from the disturbances of the functions of a plant from any cause whatever. Less than three-quarters of a century ago it was the common view that all cultivated plants must be regarded as diseased because they were growing under unnatural conditions. Therefore, it was reasoned, their functions must be disturbed. We no longer follow this mode of thinking. There is no reason to believe that plants are weakened or impaired in vitality by continued cultivation. It is true that we cannot define what we mean by "vitality" in a plant, but if its vitality was impaired by continuous cultivation we should finally expect it to die. This has not been our experience. Wheat has been in cultivation for thousands of years and the plants are more vigorous and give greater yields today than one thousand years ago. You will perhaps mention the "running out" of varieties. I do not think varieties have run out. They have been superseded by better ones and by comparison the older variety has appeared to run out. We have no record but our judgment to show that any variety has run out. It is true, certainly, that all plants vary under cultivation, and the same seed pod may give some offsprings of a weak and some of a vigorous habit, but this is incident to cultivation and not caused thereby. The cause lies in the unknown factors governing the variation of plants.

As physiological troubles we mention the "sleeping" of flowers and bursting of the calyx. The cause of those troubles rests to a great extent in the nature of the variety, but to some extent also in outer conditions. The very fact that the calyx of certain varieties bursts with some growers, but not with others, shows that this trouble is greatly influenced by outer conditions and can be solved by experimentation. As yet, as I have said, these subjects have never been scientifically investigated. It is to be hoped that some time these questions will receive their proper share of attention by our experiment stations.

Fungous Diseases.

In considering fungous diseases we must keep in mind distinctly one thing: These diseases are caused by distinct parasitic organisms. A fungus is an individual organism just as much as the carnation plant is. It has a vegetative period and finally produces spores, which again reproduce the same fungus. Its whole development can be followed with the same certainty with which the development of any plant can be followed from seed to maturity. Parasitic fungi live in the tissues of other plants, spreading in the same manner as roots in the soil. In this way fungi produce diseases by destroying the tissues of the plants upon which they feed.

Diseases of this nature are often attributed to some sort of unfavorable conditions, such as lack of ventilation, too much water, deep planting and the like. This is an error. While certain conditions favor the growth of fungi, and thus cause disease to appear more abundantly, it is nevertheless true that such diseases would not appear if the fungi were absent. The fungi are in every instance the prime cause of disease, not the conditions.

There are at the present time but two fungous diseases of the carnation which we need to discuss, the rust and stem-rot. The rust was a prevalent disease about ten years ago. At that time it was feared as the worst enemy of the carnation, as its frequent discussion in the horticultural literature of that time indicates. It still appears spasmodically here and there on some varieties, but it is no longer the dreaded enemy of the carnation. We will come back to the causes of this again.

The Problem of Stem-Rot.

The stem-rot is a far more serious disease and one which will be difficult to control. It is caused by a fungus of the genus fusarium. While the name of the fungus may not carry with it any special significance, we shall see presently that this is one of a great group of fungi which have received considerable attention of late, and that the study of this group has been the chief means of developing a new method for controlling diseases. These fungi are the causes of the now well known "wilt diseases" of many plants. The wilt diseases of the cotton, cowpea, watermelon, flax and aster are caused by species of fusarium. These diseases have been carefully investigated and from the knowledge gained from them we can fill out, tentatively at least, such points as are still unknown in the life of the carnation fusarium.

Stem-rot is not primarily a rotting of the stem, but a wilt disease first manifesting itself by a wilting of the leaves of some shoots. Very often only the leaves on one side of a shoot wilt and in nearly all cases only a part of the plant is affected. This is more especially true during the early stages of the disease. It will frequently be found that the branches on one side of the plant are affected and sometimes only those arising low down on the main stem. The disease always progresses upward. The leaves on the affected branches soon die and turn to a pale color without dropping. The upper leaves on these branches may be wilted but still grow, until the whole branch finally dies. The calyx lobes or flower stems usually turn yellow at the tips before the upper leaves begin to die.

The root systems of these plants appear healthy externally with the exception of one or two roots. These are completely decayed so that only a remnant of them is left. Yet if the diseased plants are carefully examined after the roots have been washed these decayed roots can always be found. Here is evidence that the fungus has entered the plant from the soil through the roots.

The course of the fungus in the plant and the reason for the peculiar damage it causes can be easily seen by cutting microscopical sections at different parts in the diseased stem and branches. The fungus grows from the infected roots into the water-conducting channels of the stem and branches. When the disease is severe these can be seen to be literally plugged up with a mass of the mycelium of the fungus. It is then impossible for the plant to obtain sufficient water and wilting and death are the results. Sometimes the fungus invades only the ducts on one side of the stem and then the leaves and branches on this side wilt. Later when the plant is dying the other tissues are also invaded, first the pith and then the cortex. The fungus produces innumerable spores on the dead stems and on the lower portions of the leaves.

The Cause and the Remedy.

So much for the effect of the fungus on the carnation plant. Questions of more practical importance are: How does this disease get into the carnation beds, and how can it be prevented?

The fusariums are a group of soil fungi. They are found nearly everywhere on decaying organic matter in the soil. I have been unable to collect evidence showing that the stem-rot reappears in the same soil year after year, this being due to the fact that carnation growers change their soil annually. We know, however, that the plants are attacked from the soil and this, in connection with the fact that the fusariums are found almost everywhere and can grow freely on dead matter in the soil, leaves scarcely any room for doubt that the soil is the source of infection. It has been definitely shown that the wilt fungus of the cotton, watermelon, cowpea and flax remain indefinitely in soils once infected. In fact, it has been found impossible to eradicate them. The same is probably true for the carnation wilt or stem-rot.

The most important question is, how to prevent the disease? Since it remains in the soil it is beyond the reach of the usual fungicides. It attacks the plants beneath the soil so that direct preventive measures are practically excluded. What hope have we then of ever controlling the disease? I think the solution of the question will come from a study of varieties. If we look over the different varieties now generally cultivated we find that some are badly affected, others less, and some seem not to suffer from the disease at all. It is somewhat difficult to collect exact data on this, but it seems to be everywhere conceded that such varieties as Crane, Morning Glory and Flora Hill are most subject to the disease, many growers having thrown these varieties out entirely. Flamingo, Apollo and White Cloud seem to suffer as much as those just mentioned. On the other hand, many varieties seem to be free from the disease. These are especially the strong growing varieties, such as Harlowarden, Enchantress, those of the Lawson type and Lady Bountiful. I have seen America planted where Crane died of stem-rot, yet the former variety was not affected. Some varieties seem to outgrow the disease, even when affected. This seems to be true of Bradt and Lord. These observations are as yet of limited extent, but they point to one conclusion: Some varieties of carnations are immune from stem-rot.

The problem for the future will be the production and selection of immune varieties. It should be the aim of the originator to produce resistant varieties and only such varieties should be put upon the market. This plan is not impossible, for it has been successfully followed in the case of cotton. Through the work of the Department of Agriculture several varieties of cotton have been produced which are resistant to the wilt. Those can be planted in infected fields, where other varieties have been exterminated, without being attacked by the disease. I am convinced that we have a similar example in the carnation rust. Almost imperceptibly the discussion of this disease has dropped from horticultural literature. Why? If we examine the older catalogues we find many varieties advertised as "rust proof." These may or may not have proved as represented, but the fact shows the tendency of the time to produce rust proof carnations. Only the varieties that actually proved rust proof finally were extensively cultivated and today the rust has practically disappeared from our greenhouses. I have no doubt that we will have a similar experience with the carnation stem-rot. We have already indication of the lines to follow and experience has shown that they can be followed successfully.

EXHIBITION CARNATIONS.

BY FRED. H. LEMON, RICHMOND IND.

In approaching the subject of "Exhibition Carnations," the first inclination is to seek a definition for the term. What are exhibition carnations and who are the growers of exhibition carnations?

When we speak of exhibition chrysanthemums there immediately arises before us a vision of immense, reflexing or incurving Japanese blooms of various shades of color, some light, some dark, some gaudy, some dull, all beautiful, but scarcely any practicable for the purely commercial grower. We find these in the hands of a special class of growers. First, the large growers, importers and introducers of new chrysanthemums, whose aim in exhibiting the marvelous creations of the hybridizer is to arouse the interest of prospective buyers of young plants. Second, the private gardener, that true horticultural enthusiast, whose time and skill are devoted to perfecting the magnificent blooms, mainly to satisfy a love of the beautiful in nature.

First, Grow Good Flowers.

When we turn to the carnation, however, and examine the exhibition and the exhibitor, we find a magnificently large collection of the very same varieties which are daily seen by thousands in the wholesale houses of the country, flowers a little better than the best in the market, perhaps, because more carefully handled, and exhibited by the very men whose vast ranges supply the markets. Thus is the carnation distinctively the business man's flower and an exhibition of carnations a most practical demonstration of what can be accomplished by care and attention in growing flowers for the market.

A consideration, therefore, of the subject now before us must of necessity encroach to a certain extent upon the daily task of cutting, packing, and shipping carnations, because the very methods which result in putting flowers into the market in the best possible condition must form a foundation for our plans and methods of putting our blooms into the exhibition hall in perfect condition.

Even Color Essential.

Granted, then, that we have flowers which we think are good enough to exhibit, and we might say right here that they must be rather good in this day and age, the first question is the selection of blooms and time and method of cutting. Just here a study of the scale of points for judging will be of great benefit. This shows us that color must be the first consideration, with stem and size counted equally for second place.

Great care should be used to obtain a very evenly-colored lot of blooms, even at the expense of other points. With this end in view it is best, when possible, to cut all the flowers for one class about the same time for there will surely be variations in color if some of the blooms have been kept in water sixty hours and some only six hours.

Cutting the Blooms.

Use a sharp knife to cut the blooms and take every inch of stem you can get without going into the hard wood. The proper condition of a bloom to be cut for exhibition depends largely upon the variety but may be generally stated as just before that bloom reaches a state of perfection.

Here is where the judgment of the operator is put to the test; here the point where many prizes are lost. Such a variety as Enchantress, for instance, is in perfection when the flower is young and failure greets the man who allows his Enchantress to develop too fully before cutting, while that erstwhile grand variety, Flora Hill, only reaches a state of perfection for exhibition after having stood upon the plants for many days and being allowed to develop very fully before cutting. Between these two extremes are many gradations and, as before stated, it calls upon the best judgment and broadest experience at command.

In cutting for exhibition cut each class complete and keep that class to itself from this time until it is staged, only changing blooms to strengthen the class you are most desirous of winning.

Storing and Handling.

Blooms should not lie out of water long after cutting and it is a good plan to make a fresh cut on the stems after you reach the storing room and before putting them into water.

Much has been written on the subject of a storing room for blooms, but I believe that any room or cellar which meets the following requirements will be satisfactory: The air must be kept pure and sweet and moderately dry, though a little continuously evaporating moisture is not injurious. It must not be totally dark. The temperature must be kept a few degrees lower than the night temperature of your greenhouse. In such a place the flowers should stand at least six hours and may stand several days before packing. When kept more than twenty-four hours the water should be freshened and the stems re-cut every morning.

In handling blooms at all stages, especially with varieties of intense color, such as Adonis, great care should be exercised to avoid bruising. This is a matter of great importance, as varieties of high color are especially easily bruised immediately after cutting and if blooms are laid down on a rough board or cement bench, or carelessly knocked together while carrying from the house to the cooling room, they will surely show the effects later, and on the observance of these minor points often hangs success.

All flowers which have an inclination to droop or hang their heads in the slightest degree should be supported in a rigidly upright position. There are several methods of accomplishing this end. A wire ring like an ordinary carnation support may be attached to the jar in such a manner that it will act as a support for the blooms, and some people go to the trouble of tying a wire to each stem.

Whatever method is used, they must be supported from the very time they are cut, for the first two or three hours in water is the time when most of the stiffening and hardening takes place and if the stems harden in a bent or curved position, subsequent supporting will be useless.

Packing for Shipment.

Like all the other essential steps in the task of placing blooms in the exhibition hall, packing the blooms for shipment is an operation of the utmost importance, the aim being to get the blooms through in the most perfect condition, and any extra attention which can be given to this work is certainly time well spent. The most important point is to prevent the blooms from becoming crushed of mashed out of shape. This should be very carefully avoided, for if the broad bottom or ray petals become bent or pressed down, it is almost certain that they will not regain their proper form when set up for exhibition.

One of the simplest methods of accomplishing this end, and one that is fairly efficacious, is to place the blooms upon pillows, or small rolls of paper as long as the width of the box and about one and one-half inches thick.

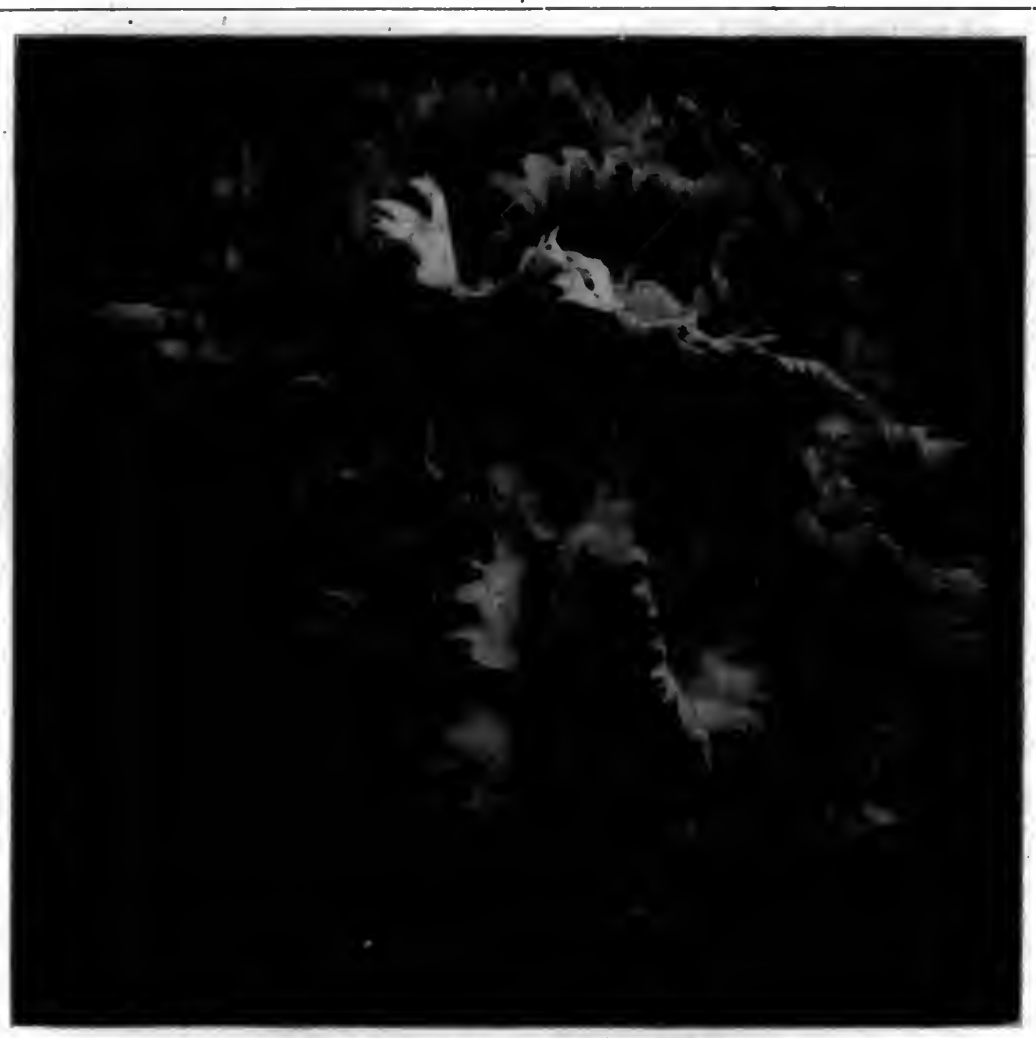
A more thorough method is to cut circular pasteboard discs, the size of the blooms, with a hole in the center large enough to slip over the stem and calyx so that the disc will press against the back of the flower, holding the ray petals in a perfectly horizontal position. These must be used in connection with the pillows, and they keep the blooms in perfect shape; indeed, in many cases improving the form of irregular blooms.

As to packing the blooms, there are as many different methods as there are exhibitors. If the shipment is a long one we have found it a good plan to lay the ends of the stems upon wet tissue paper and place a layer of wet tissue over every layer of stems, so that the ends of the stems, freshly re-cut, are all surrounded by moisture. The flowers should be packed with their heads all one way, and a cleat pressed firmly down near the lower end of the stems every fifth or sixth row.

For our midwinter shows, very heavy lining of boxes is necessary, so some expedient must be adopted to prevent the heavy layers of paper, which are turned over the top, from resting on the blooms, as this will certainly press them out of shape.

If there are several boxes, it is a good plan to mark the contents by classes on the outside of each.

An Uncertain Factor.



If the discussion of this paper brings out a recipe for the safe and expeditious handling of the boxes by the express companies the writer will be devoutly thankful. The only rule we know is: Give your boxes to the company and join the "Don't Worry Club."

If your exhibit is small, however, an excellent method is to buy a cheap trunk, make three trays to fit in it, pack your flowers very firmly, fill your upper vest-pocket with cigars with bands around them, your lower pockets with "quarters," and take it through as baggage. If you use this method you must not expect to "experunce the comforts of thravel," to quote Mr. Dooley, because it is necessary to follow the example of the elephant and stay close to your trunk.

Staging the Blooms.

Now, do not think because your blooms are fine, have been well packed, and have arrived in time, that the prize is won. It is impossible to over-estimate the value of staging the blooms properly. It is safe to assert that where there are a number of entries of almost equal merit, the blooms which are most effectively staged have five points advantage. This is mainly the result of the first impression on the judges. Judges are human and the most impartial man in the world cannot possibly avoid being influenced, to a certain extent, by his first impression, formed unconsciously the very instant his eyes take in the various entries.

The standard for an artistic parlor arrangement will not fit the exhibition. The aim here is to show every bloom in such manner that it will emphasize the salient points of the scale for judging. The blooms should be arranged evenly, if possible, not allowing any bloom to touch its neighbor. Every inch of stem possible should show above the vase and the stems should be held very tightly at the bottom, in order to spread the blooms properly. It is frequently a good plan to use a smaller vase than the one supplied for the class, to accomplish this end.

When you begin unpacking, make a fresh cut on the ends of the stems as they are taken from the box, give the bloom a gentle downward rub with the hand to overcome any slight sleepy appearance and lay them down on the table, spread out so that each bloom may be examined. When one class is unpacked, carefully select and count out the exact number of blooms required for the class. Keep the scale of points in mind: Evenness of color first; stem second, and size a close third.

In arranging the blooms select the longest stems first; take them up one at a time and hold them by the extreme end of the stem, with the flower hanging down. Use the longest, strongest and straightest stems for a central bunch, placing the blooms exactly even. Work the blooms around this central bunch in circles, if that expression may be used, turning the bunch in the hand and adding blooms equally on all sides. Place the outer rows of blooms so that they will stand a little lower than the central bunch. When complete, place the whole bunch in a vase that will hold the stems as tightly as they have been held by the hand, and do not shove them too far down.

Study Color Effect.

After the blooms are arranged, a study of color effect in placing the vase is important. A light scarlet carnation may be fine, and deserve to win, but if placed next to a variety the color of Adonis it will lose much of its effectiveness.

Fundamentally, of course, intrinsic merit in the flowers themselves should win, but deep down in the heart of the florist, who becomes the judge, is the artistic instinct which will not be denied, and in this day of close competition, a recognition of this fact, if combined with high grade stock, will aid materially in reaching the goal, first place against strong competition.

In summing up the points to be considered, one rule may be deducted: If you want to win, nothing is too much trouble.

CARNATIONS FOR SHIPMENT.

BY C. L. WASHBURN, CHICAGO.

[An address before the American Carnation Society at the Chicago meeting, January 26.]

The development of the shipping business has been the cause of the remarkable increase in the growing of carnations in the Chicago market. Ten years ago a very few of the blooms then being grown would do to ship, while the quantity grown was not over ten or twenty per cent of the present output. The demand from outside points was very heavy and the problem to solve was how to ship the carnations so they would arrive in good condition. This brought a close study of the methods of handling the flowers and also the constant trial of new varieties. As soon as the growers began to improve their stock and their system of handling the flowers, there was an immense increase in the demand for the goods.

This vast increase has taken place mostly in the last six or seven years, and every year has shown a larger amount of carnations planted and handled than the previous year. It is now almost impossible to get at the exact amount of carnation blooms received each season, but a conservative opinion would place the number at about 50,000 blooms per day during October and November, and then a gradual increase to 100,000 per day by midwinter, and continued at this rate to the end of the season. At least seventy-five or eighty per cent of this amount is shipped away from the city, and in the ability to deliver these flowers at their destination in first-class condition lies the successful conduct of the business.

The manner of handling these blooms as adopted by most of the larger growers is as follows:

Cutting the Blooms.

The cutting of the flowers must be attended to with considerable judgment as regards the weather. If the weather is very cold the flowers should be allowed to open a little more than usual, as if cut too close in very cold weather they soon go to sleep. Again, if there is a warm wave, with lots of moisture in the atmosphere, the flowers will be soft and must be cut pretty close; also, during these warm spells the flowers should be kept in a little cooler temperature than usual to make the blooms as firm as possible. After the flowers are cut and tied in bunches of twenty-five each, they should be placed in water as soon as possible. This is best accomplished by having pails of fresh water standing handy to the benches, so that as soon as a bunch is tied up it can be placed in the water at once. This is very necessary, as it helps prolong the life of the flower. If the blooms are left out of water until the cutting is all finished, a number of them will have wilted a little and the sap in the stem hardened up to such an extent that the flower will not suck up water freely.

After the cutting and bunching is finished the flowers should be placed in water in a closet or room where the temperature remains steady at about 55 degrees, and where no draughts of air will strike them. When packing to send to the commission man or wholesale store, use a few sheets of newspaper between each layer of bunches, and keep the ends of the stems from touching any of the flowers. Two layers of bunches are enough to put in any package, as too many heads get broken when packed in too solidly. The wholesale or commission

Such a variety as Enchantress, for instance, is in perfection when the flower is young and failure greets the man who allows his Enchantress to develop too fully before cutting, while that erstwhile grand variety, Flora Hill, only reaches a state of perfection for exhibition after having stood upon the plants for many days and being allowed to develop very fully before cutting. house should put the flowers in water as soon as received.

Stock for Shipment.

Now, for short distances, where the flowers can be shipped on trains that will arrive early enough for the flowers to be delivered that same day, the stock sent is usually that cut the night before; but for flowers that will have to remain packed in the boxes over night, and for all long distance shipments, the stock taken is always cut in the morning and, after standing in water from three to six hours, is sent in to the market and shipped away the same day. The old idea that a carnation keeps best if allowed to stand in water twelve to twenty-four hours before sending into market has been disproved by actual experience, and of the carnation blooms received by the wholesale growers at least two-thirds the stock is cut in the morning and shipped in to their wholesale store in the early afternoon to send away the same day. These flowers will arrive in better shape and last longer every time than if cut the day before.

After carnations have been kept eighteen or twenty hours in water they seem to get kind of soggy and do not ship well.

Packing the Boxes.

The boxes used for shipping carnations are made of thin wood, half-inch ends and quarter-inch tops, bottoms and sides, with two half-inch cleats to fasten the stems down and hold the ice securely. These boxes are usually twelve inches wide and four to eight inches deep, and thirty-six to forty-six inches long. The boxes may appear too long at first, but they are better too long than too short. Line the boxes first with four to eight thicknesses of newspapers, depending on the weather. Then a single thickness of soft wax paper all around. Commence and put in a row of carnations, usually about six flowers to a row, and between each row of heads place a strip of wax paper about three inches wide and as long as the box is wide. About four rows of flowers in each end will constitute a layer, and between each layer place a sheet of wax paper the width of the box and long enough to cover all the heads in that layer. Keep on until the box is completed.

It will be found that with the extra long stems now being grown that four or five rows in each end of the box will be all that can be put in a layer, as by that time the stems will be within six inches of the opposite row of flower heads. The number of layers of flowers should not go over four or six, which will allow of from 200 to 300 carnations in one box. In the center of the box, where the stems meet, there should be placed at least eight or ten thicknesses of well saturated newspapers. These newspapers should be kept in a pail of water so that they will have absorbed all the water they possibly can before being placed on the stems. After putting this wet paper on the stems, place the two cleats on and fasten them down securely with nails. Be careful in placing the cleats to put them only on the double rows of stems and not beyond, and also see there is plenty of wet newspapers under them, so there will be no danger of breaking the stems by pushing the cleats too far down.

The Question of Ice.

The subject of icing a box is a debatable point, but for long distance shipments our experience is that a small piece of ice well wrapped with newspapers helps to preserve the flowers from heat and also keep the newspapers over the stems moist. For varieties that have brittle stems, like Lawson, care must be taken not to fasten the cleats down too tight, or too near the neck of the flower, or the stems will be broken in handling the package. It is also well to put a few sheets of tissue paper well crumpled up between the cleats and the flower heads. This will absorb any damp, cold air from the ice and will also serve as a cushion to protect the flowers from shaking up and down in the box by rough handling.

The Points to Improve.

In order to dispose of our product to advantage, it is absolutely necessary to continue to improve our methods of handling carnations intended for shipment. They must be grown stronger, more air given, and great care taken in feeding. The effect of the warm spring rains must be overcome in some way, as during such periods it is almost imposible to ship carnations any distance and not have them arrive fast asleep.

All the little details of cutting, placing in water and shipping, should be attended to with the greatest fidelity and, as we improve our methods of handling and our varieties of stock, so shall we increase our volume of business. The advisability of devoting a certain amount of glass to growing plants for spring and early summer blooming is a point that should be considered. There are some varieties that are at their best during these periods, and there is no doubt that carnations always ship best when in full crop.

If the creators of new varieties would give more attention to the keeping and shipping qualities of their new flowers instead of trying to increase the size so much they would be working along lines that are susceptible of considerable improvement. No matter how large a flower, or how fragrant or brilliantly colored it is, if it will not keep well and ship well it cannot be grown extensively. The immense number of railroads centering here and reaching out in every direction, with frequent trains and quick express service, gives us a field to be supplied that reaches as far east as New York State, Pennsylvania, and south to Florida, New Orleans, Galveston and various Texas points, while west we can reach all Colorado towns and some points in Montana, and then on north to Winnipeg. This vast scope of country makes Chicago the central flower market of the United States and has built up the immense greenhouse business of this vicinity.

RADIATION AND HORSE-POWER.

Will you kindly tell us how to estimate the number of feet 1¼-inch pipe to each square foot of glass surface to maintain a certain temperature inside, with given outside temperature? How many feet of radiation can a horizontal tubular boiler rated at fifty horse-power carry without being overloaded? A. L. W.

I know of no tables which will give the information in the form desired. Each foot of 1¼-inch pipe represents .434 square feet radiating surface. The amount of work which this amount of radiating surface will do depends upon the kind of heat used, whether steam or hot water, the pressure under which it is used, as well as the temperature desired in the house to be heated. These factors are variable and the problem of heating a greenhouse is not an impirical rule of thumb matter that can be stated in general terms for all cases.

In order, therefore, to intelligently answer the question it would be necessary to make a table giving the heating power of a square foot of radiating surface for hot water at various temperatures and for steam at different pressures for the different house temperatures to be employed ranging from 40 to 80 degrees, the usual range through which various greenhouse operations are carried on. It is therefore much easier for the writer, and infinitely more satisfactory for the florist or gardener, to state a specific problem than to attempt to state impirical rules to be followed in all cases. Tables are given in Bailey's Horticulturists' Rule Book and in Taft's Greenhouse Management, which state the number of square feet of glass that can be heated by one square foot of radiation for different temperatures, but even these tables must be used with due allowance for latitude, exposure and a safety limit based on careless workmanship and improperly constructed and equipped boilers.

This problem of the most effective economical means of heating greenhouses is the most important problem in connection with commercial floriculture today. By the use of inferior boilers and poorly installed piping only a fraction of the efficiency of the fuel burned can be secured. This, taken in connection with the gradually advancing price of fuel, renders this factor one of the most vital economic factors in the maintenance of a commercial plant. We may, by employing skilled gardeners and improved methods in connection with the best modern greenhouse construction, increase the output of the house, but if the fuel bill is not looked after with equal care the business may prove unremunerative. The REVIEW is ready and willing to answer all specific questions and, as before stated, I believe these will be more satisfactory to the craft than will general answers.

Instead of stating the capacity of a boiler in horse-power, it would be much better to state the diameter and length of the boiler, together with the number, diameter and length of the flues and the style of setting. These are positive values, while horse-power in heating boilers has little significance. Horse-power depends upon pressure and is an accurate measure where work is being done as in an engine or pump. Roughly speaking, one horse-power is equivalent to 100 square feet of radiating surface. A fifty horse-power boiler, therefore, should be able to carry 5,000 feet of radiation, an equivalent of 11,500 feet of 1¼-inch pipe.

TO CONTRIBUTORS.

The increase in the size of the REVIEW, gratifying as it has been as a mark of general appreciation, has brought with it certain difficulties. It was once possible to put in type on Wednesday, the day of publication, a large part of all the matter used in any given issue. To do so now that so much more matter is printed, would so encroach upon the time allotted to press work, binding and mailing as to seriously delay the delivery of the paper.

It is, therefore, desirable that in so far as possible contributors place their matter in our hands on Tuesday, or, better yet, on Monday. If each one will each week make a little effort to this end we shall then always be in a position to handle matter which may occasionally be belated.

If advertisers, too, will bear in mind that we would like "copy" not later than Tuesday, they will be helping us to give them our best attention when circumstances make it desirable to change the advertisement on Wednesday.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Inspect the Canna Roots.

This is the time that your canna roots should be looked over. If they are on boards beneath a carnation or a rose bench, where there is little drip, they are probably all right, but if not on boards they are sure to feel the moisture from the ground, however dry it may appear, and start into growth. This is just what you do not want them to do. If on boards and a drip from the bench is falling on a few roots, remove them or the roots will decay and be useless. Experienced men know all about these simple points, yet I have seen young men, who knew well how to treat them, deliberately put the canna roots beneath a plant bench on a wet surface where there was a constant drip and lose the entire lot. The success or failure of most of our gardening operations is not so much lack of knowing what to do as the failure to do it.

Ampelopsis Veitchii.

In the residence portions of our large cities we have used Ampelopsis Veitchii almost to excess, although there is nothing compared to it for covering stone or brick buildings and walls. It can be bought cheap enough, yet you can raise 500 for your own trade quite as cheaply by sowing the seed now, or within a month. They occupy little bench room until they are shifted from 2-inch to 4-inch pots and by that time your bedding plants are gone. They will make a good growth during summer and it is very important that they be moved outdoors by the middle of September so that they may ripen their stems and foliage before a hard frost arrives.

Dracaena Indivisa.

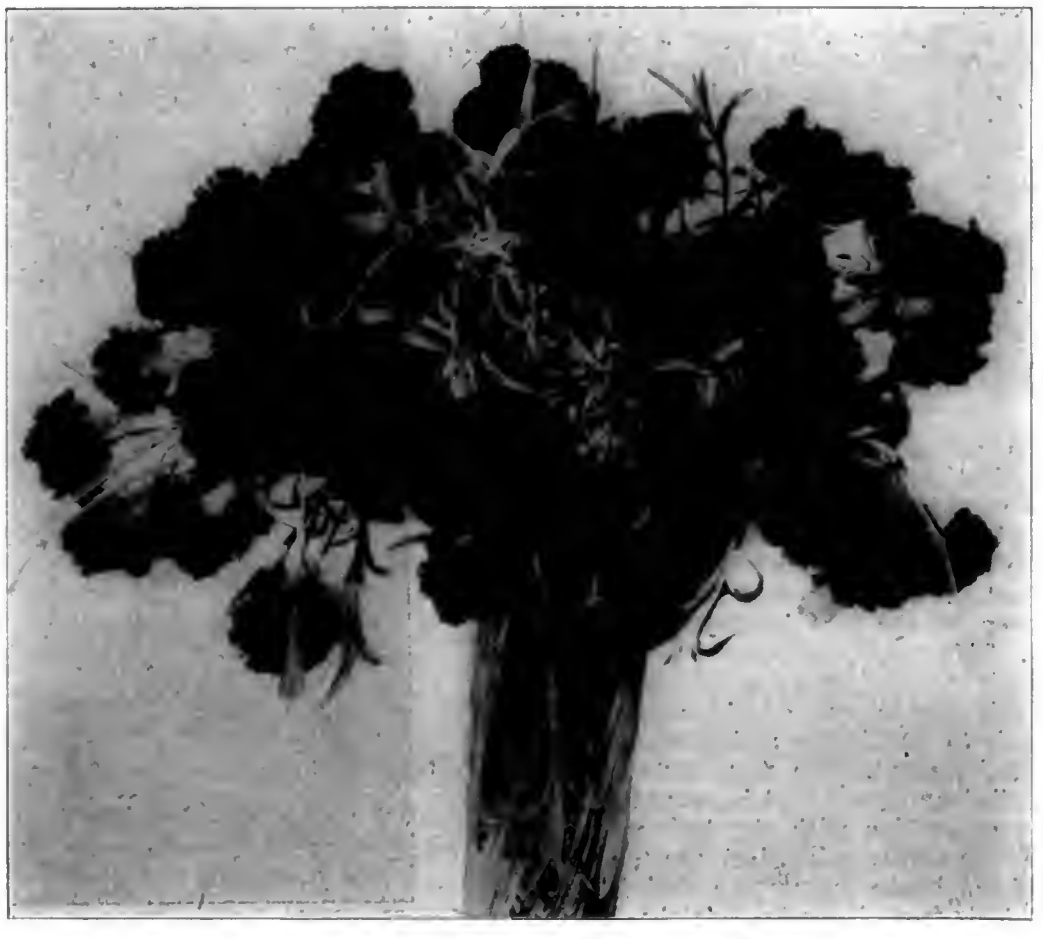
While you are sowing, don't forget Dracæna indivisa. We never have enough possibly because we occasionally neglected to sow a flat of seed. It takes about two years to raise a good plant in a 5-inch pot large enough for the center of a 2-foot vase. It is easily grown and tough. The dracæna might be called the "cemetery palm" for, whatever a vase is filled with, the last part of the order is sure to be, "Now mind, I want one of those narrow-leaved palms in the center."

Keep Propagating Space Filled.

There should be no idle space in your propagating bench at this time. The experts on roses and carnations have told all about the proper conditions required for their successful propagation. Nearly all our soft-wooded plants are very simple to root. A sand temperature of 60 to 65 degrees and the atmosphere as near as you can keep it to 50 degrees. Tropical plants, like coleus, will, of course, root faster in a temperature 15 degrees higher both top and bottom, but the respective temperatures above quoted will suit the very great majority of soft-wooded plants and root them all.

The "fungus of the cutting bed," as Peter Henderson named it, that almost invisible fungus that spreads with great rapidity over the surface of the sand, which sometimes carries off hundreds of cuttings in a few hours, is never so troublesome where the temperature of the house is kept low. A warm, close, muggy atmosphere is just the condition to produce this minute fungus. A bright sun when the sand is dry, not sufficient water at any time before the cuttings are rooted, and too high a temperature are the causes of failure.

The young growths of many plants that cannot be properly called soft-wooded, more shrubby, will also root finely now, such as lemon verbena, acalypha, H. P. roses and hydrangea. Just about now Hydrangea Otaksa for next year's forcing should go into the sand. You have the young, stout growth from the base of the plant and if rooted soon there is time to make a fine plant.



The Rooting Medium.

Last week I answered a correspondent a question about the use of coal ashes and mentioned that it is an excellent material for the propagating bed. I said, for that purpose, to "sift them through a half-inch mesh." I find that is a little coarse. A quarter-inch or three-eighths is better. Sand from the lake shore or a pit where the waves of Lake Erie once rolled, perhaps two million years ago, is easily procured here, and we use it, but if we were so situated that sand was difficult to get and perhaps paid for by the barrel, we should use our coke or hard coal ashes. I have several times seen carnation and chrysanthemum cuttings rooted in ashes quite as well as they were ever rooted in the cleanest sand. And I have never seen any trouble with fungus on a bed of ashes. But proper condition of the cutting and care are of far more consequence than the medium you use for the bed.

Tuberous Rooted Begonias.

If you raise tuberous-rooted begonias and gloxinias from seed they can now be sown. They are both extremely small seeds and are delicate to handle, for when just germinating a few hours' neglect will ruin the whole batch. We think, at the extremely low price at which these bulbs can now be purchased from specialists or our seed houses, that the small grower had better purchase annually one year old bulbs.

If you do sow seed, then fill a seed pan half full with broken crocks or coarse lumps of loam or anything that will afford good drainage. Finish off with an inch of finely sifted compost. An equal mixture of loam, sand and leaf-mold will do for any very fine seeds. Press the surface smooth, moderately firm and level, the latter being important. Water with a fine sprinkler until you believe all the soil is wet. In an hour or so the surface of the soil will be moist but not sticky. Then sow the seeds and press them gently into the soil. No covering of soil is needed. A piece of cotton cloth laid on the surface and kept moistened is about all that is necessary, but the moment the seeds germinate, remove the cloth. Uniformity of moisture until the plants are well up is the important point. You cannot expect many flowers from these young plants, at least in pots. Specialists plant the seedlings out in rich soil in frames in May or June and they make fine bulbs for the next year's flowering. It is six or seven weeks too early to start the tuberous-rooted begonias for bedding. The gloxinias are grown only for a pot plant and you can start some bulbs now or later on, even

A. B. Davis & Son's Red Sport of Gen. Maceo.

Gladioli Among Carnations.

There is not much gained by starting gladiolus bulbs before this, for they are slow to start before the season is advanced. We put them in the carnation beds. If you think they are a detriment to your crop of carnations and don't pay for the harm done, then don't do it, but with us they have never brought price enough to warrant a bench to themselves and we have never seen much harm done when not overdone. If in a 6-foot bed of carnations you plant four bulbs every third row, you will notice little if any difference in your carnations. The gladioli will not flower before the end of May or early June, yet that is a long while before we get them in the garden. Squeeze the bulb into the bed even with the surface.

Forcing Valley.

We would like to have said earlier something about lily of the valley. There may yet be some beginners struggling with these beautiful little flowers, as we did twenty years ago. It is too long a story how to build a box for the forcing of these roots and, briefly, for the man who only forces a thousand a week, a suitable place can easily be fixed. Let there be six inches of sand with sufficient hot water pipes beneath the bed to insure a steady heat of 75 to 80 degrees in the sand. The top heat now and for the next month can be 55 to 60 degrees. We failed several years simply because we had too high a temperature of the air. Do not cut the roots off to within three inches of the pips, but cut off only an inch from the end of the roots. Water every day until the bells can be plainly counted; then don't let water touch the flower spike, or it will discolor and rot the bells. Carefully water the sand between the rows. The first ten days the bed can be covered a foot above the crowns with thin, light boards fastened together a convenient size. Then, for another week, frames covered with cheese cloth will do, and after the first bells are showing color you can give them the full light, providing no sunshine strikes them.

Just as an illustration between success and failure, we had for several years great success in such a bed as described; then came a time that we had to force out some lilies for Easter and in March we ran the night heat up to 70 degrees and higher in the daytime. That settled our valley success. They were spindling, drooped and were all-round "N. G." Of course, as the season advances less bottom heat is needed; in fact, it must be reduced. At the same time do all you can to keep down the top temperature.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

RETURNING CONDENSATION.

Kindly advise what you consider the best solution for the following: We have a self-contained tubular boiler, having a grate area of about twenty square feet. It has fifty-two return flues three inches in diameter and twenty-six four inches in diameter and has a good draft. It stands seven feet high from floor to crown. We are at present using this boiler for hot water circulation. We intend increasing our glass, which, when increased, will consist of three attached houses, two 20x100 and one 16x100. The side walls are four feet high with no glass and ridge is ten feet high. There will also be one short span house 32x100 and ten feet to the ridge, with twenty-four inches of glass in the sides; also two separate houses, each 25x100, fifteen feet to the ridge and side walls five and one-half feet high with twenty-four inches of glass.

The floor of the first three houses is not quite as high as the crown of the boiler and the floor of the last three houses is three and one-half feet lower than that of the first three and about two and one-half feet higher than cellar floor on which boiler rests.

We desire to heat the houses with low pressure steam, if possible, at a temperature suitable for carnations (48 to 54 degrees) except the house 16x100, where we need a temperature of 65 degrees during zero weather.

We realize that a steam trap is necessary. Are there steam traps in the market which will successfully do the work with low pressure steam? And would this boiler, under low pressure steam, heat the plant, and would you advise the use of low pressure under the circumstances? If not, then would high pressure steam heat the plant, and what would you use to return the water to the boiler, considering that the pressure from the water main which feeds the boiler is only ten or twelve pounds and would not overcome the steam pressure? Would an injector with a return steam trap be as good or better than a steam pump?

W. B. C.

I judge from your statement that it is impracticable to change the location of the boiler so as to place it on lower ground and thus take advantage of a gravity system, or even to deepen the present pit to accomplish the same end. If neither of these alternatives can be used, the next best thing is the steam trap. By placing a hot-well in the floor of the present boiler room, into which to drain the returns, a trap can be used to lift the water from the hot-well and discharge it into the boiler. In order to make a steam trap work successfully it is necessary to maintain a steam pressure of not less than six to eight pounds. When the pressure falls below this point traps with which I have had experience do not work well. If the pressure is maintained at six to eight pounds, however, there will be no difficulty in maintaining a satisfactory circulation with such an arrangement. If electricity is available an electric pump can be installed to do the work of the steam trap or a small gasoline engine might be substituted to do the same work. There are several good steam traps upon the market, among which may be mentioned the Morehead, the Albany and the Kieley. I believe that with an intelligent fireman who will maintain a constant pressure on the boiler no trouble will be experienced from the use of low pressure steam and a good trap.

GIVE MORE HEAT.

We have a carnation house with solid beds. The house is only two years old. The plants give very few flowers but appear very healthy. Last season we thought we were too late getting them planted, so this year were planted in June. The house has ventilators all around. We keep the temperature about 40 degrees at night and 60 degrees in the daytime. Why don't we get flowers?

L. & A. H.

If, as you say, your plants are healthy and strong, the only trouble with your carnations is too low a temperature; 40 degrees at night will not give you many blooms during the winter on any kind of a bed, solid or raised. Raise the temperature to 50 to 52 degrees at night and 60 to 65 degrees in the day. But don't do it too suddenly; a degree each night is fast enough.

OUTDOOR CARNATIONS.

I want to grow some carnations outdoors to come into bloom about July. Please tell me how to go about it. What kinds to get and when. How to get them and how to care for them.

C. S. M.

If you want carnations for blooming outdoors as early as July you will have to get started pretty soon, so as to have good, thrifty plants that have been topped at least once before you plant them out. Cuttings that are potted before February 15 will do all right if you keep them moving. Pot them into 2-inch pots and when they are well established repot into 3-inch pots and top them after they have taken hold of the soil. Plant out as early as you can and let them come into flower as soon as they want to. Do not top them after they have been planted out if you want early blooms. Plant them where you can reach them with the hose and in good rich soil. A mulch of well-rotted manure will help them, too, to keep the moisture in the soil. The best varieties we find are Crocker and Scott in bright pink, Fair Maid in light pink, Flora Hill and Mrs. Fisher in white and Crane in red. This list might be improved upon in the newer varieties, but these are all good and moderate in price.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Feeding.

With the days growing noticeably longer, the questior of feeding comes up for consideration. I know many growers commence this operation much earlier, but my experience has been that with proper methods of handling, it is not necesary; neither is it advisable, as a rule, until the short, dark days of winter are past. If your soil was of good quality when the plants were benched, intelligent care will have kept the stock in far better condition than if food of a stimulating nature had been employed.

Soil may be of very good quality but deficient in some needed element or perhaps may contain correct proportions of fertilizers but not in a readily available form. Top dressings of the needed element and the application of lime dispose of these cases in the order given, being only a small part of that which goes to make up intelligent care.

One must needs be well posted on the peculiarities and make up of his soil, how much has been cut from the plants and their state of health when considering the question of feeding. It would not be advisable to feed a variety which for any reason has not bloomed well; neither will any amount of feeding benefit a sickly lot of plants. The chances are they have the dyspepsia already.

In the case of a variety planted early and which has been giving good returns all winter and its vigorous look indicates continued bloom, the case is different. The soil must be somewhat depleted, as either size of bloom, strength of stem, color of foliage or brilliancy in the flower will indicate, but be sure the stock is healthy, well over the holiday strain and a goodly number of strong shoots on the way.

It is good policy before applying liquid food to first rake the surface soil very lightly. This not only admits air but prevents too rapid leaching of the liquid into the soil, resulting in a loss of food or unequal feeding.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

SEMI-SOLID BEDS.

I would like to hear again, through the REVIEW, on the subject of semi-solid beds for carnations. Are they giving as good or better results than the raised benches? How does the growth, quality and quantity of bloom compare? For an even-span carnation house thirty feet wide with walls five and one-half feet high and fourteen and one-half feet to the ridge give the right pitch to the roof?

J. C. H.

Every season we hear of more growers adopting either solid or semi-solid beds for growing both roses and carnations, and among them are large growers, too, and among the most successful in the land. Just today we had the pleasure of an hour's visit from that progressive southerner, Mr. Joy, of Nashville, and he told us that their experience with solid beds has been so satisfactory that all their benches are going to come down and give place to solid beds for carnations and roses, including Beauties.

Two Benches 5x500 Feet of Carnation Crisis.

There is no doubt in my mind that, all things considered, the solid beds or semi-solid, beds are preferable to raised benches. The one thing you want to be sure of is that you have good drainage. If the ground on which you build is of a sandy nature you can just as well have solid beds, but if it does not naturally drain well, then you would better build a semi-solid bed, using a foot of cinders, coarse ashes or broken stone and about four inches of soil to plant in. You will not find much, if any, difference in quality and quantity between the two methods except what may be caused by the soil used or the grade of culture given. These will count for just as much with the one as with the other and in fact they are the main factors.

The dimensions you give for sidewalls, ridge and width will give about the right pitch to your roof. A. F. J. BAUR.

HAD A CHECK.

I send specimens of Lawson, Norway and Joost which are crippled, the foliage seeming unable to unfold. What is the trouble? Only a few plants are as yet affected. L. M.

The specimens came so badly frozen that I was unable to form any idea of what might be the cause of the trouble. Frequently such trouble is brought on by a severe check of some kind: Dry at the bottom of the bed, too strong a dose of food, a sudden change in temperature, or something like that.

A. F. J. BAUR.

TOO COOL.

I send specimens of carnation foliage to show how it is turning brown and drying up. They are in a house 40 to 45 degrees at night and 60 degrees in the day. The pipes are under the benches and I have found the soil dry a few times. I also send specimens of White Cloud. The plants are strong, but the flowers do not develop as they should. These are in a house 45 to 50 degrees at night and 65 degrees in the daytime. On account of being planted late these have never had any fertilizer.

C. U.

The drying of the foliage on your plants is caused by a bacterial disease, brought on by a general unhealthy condition of the plants. The White Cloud buds acting as they are doing is no doubt also due to the same cause. You are running them entirely too cool; 40 to 45 degrees is too low a temperature for any carnation to do anything in. Raise the temperature to 48 to 52 degrees at night and 60 to 65 degrees in the daytime. Pick off all the diseased foliage and the weak buds and when you see a renewal of growth give them a thin mulch of well rotted cow manure. Run them a little on the dry side until they begin to grow and sprinkle some wood ashes or air-slaked lime on the soil and water it in. Do this as soon as you get the soil into the right condition. Do not propagate from this stock, but buy healthy cuttings from some responsible firm. Plant earlier next season. The first of September should see all your carnations planted and started.

A. F. J. BAUR.

THE BLIGHTED CARNATION.

The note below is reprinted from the January issue of Everybody's Magazine, the publication which is printing Lawson's articles on "Frenzied Finance." His readers will hope that Mr. Lawson is more accurate than this fellow-contributor:

There was a time not long ago when the carnation was the favorite flower, surpassing in its fleeting popularity even the violet and the rose. President McKinley's fondness for the red carnation is still fresh in every memory, as is his habit of giving Mrs. McKinley a bouquet of carnations every morning. A very beautiful red carnation is called The President in remembrance of his liking. The carnation deserved the enthusiasm of its lovers. It is lovely of color, shape and fragrance. It is half hardy. It is within the reach of not too plethoric purses. But it has fallen on evil times. Its old enemies, the green fly, the red spider, and the thrips, are easily fought. Even the bacteria that attack it can be conquered. Against stem-rot and dry-rot, however, no successful defense has been found. It has lost its vitality. Its constitution has broken down. The average variety lives only three or four years and produces but a single flower to a stem. Formerly there were eight to twelve flowers to a stem. In short, the carnation is dying of some unknown disease. Which means, translated into economic language, that carnations will be rarer and costly.

CARE IN CUTTING.

During the winter months, when plants are in their most torpid state, root action slow and eyes hard to start, great care should be taken when taking the cut to leave the very best eyes on the flower stem in order to secure a future crop. Which are the best eyes for this purpose is still a mooted question and especially so where the true hybrid remontant is in question. With teas, such as Bride and Bridesmaid, it is a safe practice to leave at least three well developed leaves on the stem, as any one of these is certain to produce a good flower stem, and the others will produce as many leaves as will keep root action going when the flower is cut without causing a plethora of blind wood, which should be carefully guarded against and which can easily be induced by careless cutting.

With hybrid teas, such as Meteor, it is safe to leave even more than this number, as we invariably get the best stems from those plants which have been cut rather high. After years of experimenting with this variety, which is not quite a dead one, I am in favor of leaving at least four eyes, even on the strongest stems, as it is usually the topmost eye that gives the best stem.

On parallel benches I have tried close cutting, that is, leaving one or two eyes on one bench and on the other leaving from four to five. This, of course, showed at the first cut in favor of the close cut plants by reason of the longer stems, but during succeeding crops they failed to keep up with the other benches.

When cutting our first crop of Beauties an inch or two more in length of stem adds materially to the price and many of us are so anxious to catch that elusive dollar that we lost sight of the others that are certain to come our way if we only treat our plants right. By cutting so very close in September and October we denude our plants of their breathing apparatus, which checks root action and causes the wood to harden abnormally and the consequence is that our plants remain inactive during the winter and only start into vigor with the spring growth, when the best of the harvest is over.

Such varieties as Chatenay, Ivory and Golden Gate, which show a sparseness of foliage on the stem, should also be allowed at least four eyes, as this has a tendency to sustain and keep the plants vigorous, strong and active, lessening the tendency to take a rest, which it is the duty of every grower to obviate, and the fewer leaves we leave on a plant the greater encouragement we give to rest. And when they enter on this condition during the winter it is a hard problem to entice them to go to work again. RIBES.

ROSE SEEDS.

Please tell us how to handle rose seeds. I have two pods of seeds still on the plants that I have fertilized. Can the seeds be sown as soon as ripe or must they be stratified? F. P. B.

In order to perfect the germs the hips must remain on the bushes until they are perfectly ripe. After gathering they should be dried in the sun and afterwards rubbed out. The seed can then either be sown at once or, if the season is not suitable, the hips can be kept whole and stored in dry sand or soil until spring.

A shallow box or pan filled with soil of a sandy nature suits them. Sow in drills and cover to the depth of half an inch and place the box in a cold frame. Keep the soil moderately moist and during the summer use a light mulch of moss to keep the surface cool.

The seeds take a long time to germinate, many of them not appearing the first season, so patience must be exercised when dealing with this class of work.

As soon as the plants are large enough to handle they should be transplanted or put into 2-inch pots, shaded until root action is well commenced, and given plenty of air at all times. It usually takes a year to produce the first flower and these give us little indication, beyond color, or what quality the rose is likely to be. Ribes.

MME. CHATENAY.

Thinking of planting some Chatenay roses and not having had any experience with it, I would like to know if its constitution is robust enough for a back bench, also if grafted plants are superior to those on their own roots? I use grafted stock for all teas on account of club root but thought that perhaps Chatenay is vigorous enough to overcome this. H. T.

Chatenay, like all other roses, loves light and sunshine and, though it possesses a strong constitution it would be a mistake to give it an inferior position, as this is a certain means of weakening it.

So far as I have tested it, there seems to be no appreciable difference between grafted and own-root stock but perhaps in the grafted stock the foliage may be a little closer on the stem. If you are troubled with club root or eelworms it is always safer to use grafted stock, but as yet I have heard of no complaint with this variety on that score. Ribes.

EARTHWORMS IN ROSE SOIL.

Please let me know whether or not the common fish worm is harmful in the soil of a rose bed and, if so, the best way to get rid of them. H. A. F.

The common earthworm does no real harm to a rose bed unless they become too plentiful. They can easily be destroyed by an application of lime water in the proportion of one pound of unslaked lime to eight gallons of water. Giving the bench a fair watering with this will certainly get rid of them without causing the least injury to the stock. Ribes.

ROSE RICHMOND.

It may be of interest for rose growers to learn what we know of the new rose, as we are located within a few miles of Mr. Hill's place and are familiar with the entire history of this fine new variety. We visited the greenhouses when the first plant was grown from the seed and were at once well impressed with the flower and plant. We saw it the next season, when he had something less than a hundred plants, when we became so enthusiastic over it that we made a liberal offer for the entire stock, which he very wisely refused, although the amount was not small. When he announced to us a few weeks ago that he was ready to take orders, we immediately placed a large order, the first he received.

As we have seen the rose during these three seasons, it has always shown a most vigorous growth, good health and very free flowering. Looking at a bench of it, it never has that uneven appearance that most all benches of Liberty have. It shows much of the habit and form of one of its parents, Lady Battersea. An unusually long pointed bud and a stiff, wiry stem even in the short lengths, although it makes a large majority of good standard stems. The color is a grand red, very similar to Liberty, but a little lighter. During a recent visit we looked over about 3,000 plants in full crop for some deformed or "dumpy" looking buds, but did not find one.

The above is what we know of the rose, and we have probably seen more of it, and watched it closer than any other grower outside of Richmond.

BE EXPLICIT.

I have about 1,000 Brides and Bridesmaids and would like to know how to handle them, whether to keep them warm, or what? I have them in a house which is about 60 to 65 degrees days and 50 to 55 degrees at night. How would it be to put them in the rose house and cut them back? W. M.

Had this querist been a little more explicit it would have enabled me to give a more definite answer. For instance, I have to guess whether the plants are in pots or in the bench. If they are in pots, as I presume they are, from the freedom with which he speaks of transferring them to the rose house, I would advise him not to cut back at all, but to give them sufficient pot room and feed occasionally with liquid manure. The temperature at night is all right but they enjoy a run up to 80 degrees when the weather is bright, especially when free ventilation can be given. Ribes.

THE HISTORY AND CULTURE OF GRAFTED ROSES FOR FORCING

COPYRIGHT, 1904, BY FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Grafting Case for Few Plants.

While on the subject of cases I may mention a method that has proven very satisfactory for a limited number of plants, such as seedlings or a new variety, when the wood is scarce and needs special care. Take a box of convenient size, a cracker box is good, putty up all the cracks, put an inch of well moistened sphagnum moss in the bottom, and place the case on the sand in a propagating bed; set in the grafts, lay on a light of glass, making tight with putty, and let alone. After about ten days handle the same as a regular case. With careful grafting 100 per cent can be taken out with this method.

Grafting Dormant Wood.

There is also a scheme that can be used for dormant wood which does not require a grafting case. It cannot be recommended for general use, but only in special cases, such, for instance, as when a grower has parted with a five-dollar bill for some "highly recommended" French novelty and feels that he possibly might get his money's worth if only he could graft the few little dormant eyes.

To proceed, then, select good plump stocks direct from the bundles, picking out those which have not started from the eyes. Take scions that are well ripened and dormant. The operation of making the union is the same as for regular grafting except that after tying it should be well covered with grafting wax, which should be melted in a water bath so that it may not be hot enough to injure the wood. After waxing they should be packed in boxes in upright layers, with sphagnum moss between, and placed in a house with a temperature of 45 degrees.

In from four to six weeks, or at the time when the stocks begin to send out white rootlets, they may be taken out and potted, when they should be treated the same as though they were newly potted stocks alone, except that as the roots begin to take hold of the soil the temperature should be gradually increased. After the bud in the scion has started to grow the temperature should reach normal.

This plan has worked well for grafting dormant hybrid perpetuals and, also, it can be used quite successfully with dormant Kaiserin and Carnot.

Beds or Benches?

Having now a good batch of choice young stock, the question arises, are beds or benches preferable? For plants that are to be forced two or three years in the same soil I should say most decidedly use beds, for a variety of reasons. The Manetti, being a gross feeder, requires plenty of room in which to search for food. With our own rather light soil we plant in from seven to eight inches; but this matter of the proper depth of soil is, of course, an entirely local one and depends upon the texture of loam which is available for the work, a heavy, fine-grained clay necessitating a lesser depth in order to allow air and water to pass through it readily.

A Good Bed.

A very serviceable and economical bed is built as follows: Drive 3x3-inch chestnut posts four feet apart along the line of the outer edges of the bed; the width of the bed will, of course, vary according to the notions of the grower. Spike onto the posts, on each side of the bed, two lines of plank 8x 1½ inches, leaving the bottom plank raised two inches from the ground. Fill in about six inches of stones or broken rocks, placing carefully so as to allow for free circulation of air. Over this put three or four inches of coarse gravel, dump in the soil and the bed is ready for planting. In localities where gravel or stone is not plentiful, drain tile can probably be secured quite reasonably and ought to answer the purpose equally as well as stones and gravel.

Of course, if a man thinks that his grandchildren two generations hence will be satisfied with any form of bed which happens to be the fashion of the present day, he may construct any of the elaborate forms, using cement or brick, or any of the patented whatnots; but the one described will be used generally by the grower whose capital for the increase of his glass area must be taken from the profits of his business.

Trend Toward Solid Beds.

The trend at the present time seems to be toward so-called solid beds, as nearly all the large ranges, at least in the east, which have been constructed recently are equipped with solid beds. One of the most striking instances of this reversion from raised benches to solid beds is found in the cases of those Beauty growers who a few years ago set out young plants on benches, and who are now growing their Beauties in beds as long as three, and in some cases four, years without replanting. While, as a rule, they do not claim any great increase in the yearly average of quality, they do get a longer cutting season, in addition to the saving in young plants, soil and cost of planting.

One of the chief objections to growing plants more than one year on benches is the difficulty of properly drying them off on account of the danger of the soil becoming too dry and killing the roots completely. The solid bed, it may be remarked in this connection, maintains a more even condition of moisture and temperature, both summer and winter, than a bench, and consequently lessens the chances of injury to the plants from neglect or incompetence on the part of the workman.

While plants on a bench can be carried over successfully by the experienced grower, the beginner will find that his chances of failure are considerably lessened if he makes his first attempt in solid beds.

Union Must Be Buried.

The subsequent treatment of the grafted plants does not differ radically from that of own-root roses except in a few particulars. The one thing which is absolutely necessary, and which must be done to secure the best results with grafted roses, is to plant them so that the whole of the union of graft and scion will always be from one-half to one inch below the surface of the soil. This is imperative, not only that the plants may make roots from the union, but also for other reasons which do not seem to be so easily explained; because, aside from this question of roots, it seems to be a fact that the Manetti union needs to be surrounded with that condition of air and moisture which is found best in soil.

Moreover, the cells that form the callus at the union have a tendency to dry up when exposed to the sun and air, and consequently are not able to perform properly their functions of transmitting the sap from stock to scion. For this reason, also, I believe that young grafted plants which have been allowed to become pot-bound and thoroughly hardened, have received a check from which they will never fully recover.

I shall repeat, then, if conditions are such that the grafted plants cannot be given full justice by placing the union below the soil, then by all means do not attempt to grow them, but use own-root plants in preference.

BOULDER, COLO.—C. F. Fawcett is suffering from blood poisoning as a result of a puncture of the skin by a rose thorn.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—Owing to other interests H. O. Hinkley will give up the retail end after this winter but will continue the greenhouses.

NEENAH, WIS.—Louis Otto reports business good. Last season he built an additional house 28x60 for carnations and one 10x50 for violets, also putting in a big steel boiler, so that he has plenty of heat.

LUNCHEON TABLE DECORATIONS.

Accompanying this note is the picture of a round luncheon table decorated for a party of eight. The color scheme is white and green, and the center-piece is a star of Roman hyacinths and smilax. The central point of the star is a vase eight inches high, containing fifty Romans. Around this, traced freehand with strings of smilax, is the outline of a star. After outlining the design roughly, lay on extra pieces of smilax to make the edges the same thickness all around. Smilax will keep the star form by being merely laid on the cloth; no pinning or wiring is necessary.

Next, just within each point, is placed a crystal candlestick holding a green candle and a silver filigree shade. After this, separate three or four strings of smilax into the small strands of which they are composed. Fasten one end of one of these small strings around a candlestick, about one-third of the way up, and carry the strand to the center vase and fasten there. It should be draped loosely. This forms the center line of one of the points of the star. Fill the center lines of the other points in the same way. Then run these light strings of smilax to other points on the outline of the star till you have made a network of green from the center vase to the edge of the star all around. No fastening is necessary. The sprays will hold themselves in place if set in deep among the hyacinths in the vase and will catch among the heavier foliage on the edge. After the green part of the star has been completed, trim about one-half the stems from fifty Romans and scatter them on top of the edge of the smilax which outlines the star. Set the stems well down among the smilax leaves and let flowers fall along the smilax lengthwise, and the star is completed.

The place cards for the table were white stars with green edges done in water colors. The favors were smilax boas, each one a yard long, the light end being doubled back and a small piece added to make the thickness uniform. Half a dozen hyacinths were dotted along each boa and at one end was a white tulle bow. This end of the boa was laid at the place and the other end thrown over the back of the chair. The hostess set the example of placing the boa as the guests were seated. It was necessary, of course, to fasten the hyacinths on the boas with fine wire, and just as necessary to wrap the sharp ends of the wires back to conceal their scratching qualities. The boas required one and one-fourth strings of smilax each, one-half dozen hyacinths and one-half yard of tulle. In the star there were used nine strings of smilax and 100 Romans and one string festooned the chandelier overhead, making a total of two dozen smilax and 150 Romans. The table was six feet in diameter.

HISTORY OF DOROTHY FAUST.

I see in a recent issue of the REVIEW that the New York chrysanthemum committee through Eugene Dailledouze, chairman, in passing upon the merits of a chrysanthemum sent to them as Dorothy Faust, declared that it was a known variety, Mrs. Robert McArthur. In justice to myself, for I was the exhibitor, I feel I should make some statement and ask a few questions.

If it is McArthur, how did I get it? I never had, and I do not think anyone else around Philadelphia, had McArthur, else it would have been recognized.

Four years ago I had a batch of Bonnaffon chrysanthemums in 3-inch pots and, wishing to increase my supply, I took the top out of each. When I benched them I planted all of the original 3-inch lot and all of the plants produced from the top cuttings. When they bloomed, among the latter lot I noticed this white variety, an unusually fine clean flower. I had bought no chrysanthemums at all from any one that year and the year before only a lot of Chadwick from Robert Craig & Son. Among the original batch of 3-inch Bonnaffon I speak of there was no white. I carefully lifted this stranger among my Bonnaffons and the following year had about twenty-five plants, showing it to everyone who came in, and the next year I had quite a bench full. Mr. Craig saw it and so did Mr. Harris. Neither of them knew it and at Mr. Craig's suggestion I sent it to E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind. He said it was an unusually fine white but could not help me in naming it. I also sent a flower to Elmer D. Smith and he could not place it.

So I wonder, and still the wonder grows, how this could be Mrs. Robert McArthur. How did it get among my flowers? Could it be possible for two flowers to be so much alike as to be mistaken for one another?

If it really is McArthur I am glad to find the name for it. The only difference it will make to me is that I shall not sell any of the stock, and those who wish to grow it can buy McArthur and I shall grow my own stock.

THE BOSTON CLUB MEETING.

As briefly mentioned in last week's REVIEW, the Gardeners' and Florists' Club's meeting at Horticultural Hall on January 17 was an excellent one, the attendance being the largest in the history of the club. The retiring president, J. A. Pettigrew, in a felicitious speech, cordially thanked the members for the excellent support he had received from them during his tenure of office and predicted continued progress under the new board of officers elected. Mr. Pettigrew then handed over the gavel to his successor in office, James Wheeler, who, with the other officers, was installed and introduced to the members in proper form.

Mr. Wheeler, in an excellent speech, expressed his sincere thanks to the members for the honor conferred upon him and said if he could fill the chair half as well as the retiring president he would do well. He asked for co-operation in making 1905 the club's banner year. Mr. Wheeler was warmly applauded when he sat down.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar opened a discussion in regard to the form the awards of the club should take. He was anxious they should not duplicate those of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. Quite a number of members confessed their views on the subject, including Messrs. Finlayson, Fewkes, Orpet, Stewart, Anderson, Craig and others, most of the speakers favoring Mr. Farquhar's suggestions.

There were numerous excellent exhibits on the tables and the president appointed Messrs. Fisher, Fewkes, Downs, Duncan, Finlayson and Craig a committee on awards. They recommended awards as follows: Certificates of superior merit to A. J. Guttman, for Carnation Victory and E. O. Orpet for Cattleya Susannæ (C. Skinneri x C. Warneri). Certificates of merit to Charles Sander for Begonia Gloire de Lorraine var. Tunford Hall; to Palmer & Son, Lancaster, N. Y., for Carnation Red Lawson, and C. W. Ward for Carnations President, Ethel Ward and Robert Craig. Votes of thanks were given to the following: Carnations Octoroon, Lieut. Peary and Christmas Eve from C. W. Ward; H. A. Stevens Co. for their new Variegated Lawson, which was certificated at the December meeting; Carnations Prosperity, White Lawson and Enchantress from Guttman & Weber; seedling carnations from Backer & Co.; seedling carnations from Thomas Waldie, Beverly, Mass., which included very fine crimson and variegated varieties; white seedling carnations from Ernest E. Wild, Braintree, Mass., a cross between Lawson and Olympia, very promising and one the committee hoped to see again; Begonia Vesuvius from James Wheeler; Mont Blanc sweet peas from William Sim; very fine Lilium Harrisii from Alexander Ogg, carrying thirteen to fifteen flowers per stalk.

E. O. Orpet, in addition to Cattleya Susannæ, shown for the first time in America or Europe, had the following seedlings which attracted much attention: Lælio-cattleya Haroldiana, Cattleya x Thayeriana, Epi-cattleya, auranti-media, Lælio-cattleya epicasta (L. pumila x C. gigas), Lælio-cattleya Corona (L. cinnabarina x C. labiata), Lælio-cattleya x Milton (C. speciosissima x Brassavola glauca), Lælia x Perrini, also a fine spike of Odontoglossum crispum.

Each of the exhibitors spoke briefly on his exhibits. Frank Hamilton, of Queens, N. Y., who was present in Mr. Ward's absence, spoke for the Cottage Garden's carnations, stating that they were not selected flowers, but merely such as they were shipping to New York daily. A. J. Guttman responded for Victory, describing its good qualities. He said they had found no faults in this variety so far. They would bench 20,000 plants of it next season. Charles Sander said Begonia Tunford Hall was a grand good thing, however much some might decry it. Alexander Ogg said his Lilium Harrisii were grown in a carnation temperature and William Sim that his sweet peas were sown in July, grown in solid beds and given a night temperature of 50 degrees. E. O. Orpet spoke briefly on his seedlings, in which he said he supposed many present were not interested. Quite a number, however, thought them the most meritorious exhibit in the hall.

It was voted enthusiastically to join in the invitation extended by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society to the American Carnation Society to hold its 1906 meeting and convention in Boston.

J. Woodward Manning, being introduced, gave an excellent lecture on "The Gardener and Landscape Gardening," which was listened to with the closest attention. Mr. Manning gave numerous lantern views to illustrate his lecture. It was regrettable that the lateness of the hour prevented any discussion, as many there present would liked to have spoken on some phases of landscape question. Refreshments were served before the meeting closed, which was about 11 o'clock. All present pronounced the meeting so helpful that they felt they must ask more of their friends to join. Thirteen new members were elected during the evening. W. N. CRAIG.

RE-POTTING KENTIAS.

I have several thousand fine kentias in 2-inch pots ready for shift. Will you kindly tell me if I shall shift them at once or hold till early summer? I cannot give better than 60 to 65 degrees temperature. I want this stock ready for 4-inch stock in the spring of 1906. F. R.

As kentias contine to grow more or less throughout the winter it would be quite proper to repot this stock at once, shifting them from 2-inch to 3-inch pots. By following this plan the plants should be ready for another shift into 4-inch pots by next September or possibly a little earlier than that, and ought to make strong 4-inch stock for the spring of 1906.

A night temperature of 60 to 62 degrees is quite high enough for the kentias and will produce better and more stocky plants than if they are kept warmer and the lower temperature is less favorable for the spread of red spider and thrips. W. H. TAPLIN.

Vegetable Forcing.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

Chicago, Jan. 25.—Cucumbers, 50c to $2 doz.; leaf lettuce, 20c to 25c case; head lettuce, $2 to $3.50 bbl.

Boston, Jan. 24.—Cucumbers, $5 to $18 box; tomatoes, 30c to 40c lb.; lettuce, 25c to 50c box; mushrooms, 50c to 60c lb.; radishes, 40c to 60c box; mint, $1.25 doz. bunches; asparagus, $3 to $4 doz. bunches.

VARIETIES OF LETTUCE.

What variety of lettuce would you recommend where it is to be started in the greenhouse and then removed to cold frames? E. M.

If confined to one variety for the purpose you mention I would choose Boston Market on account of its earliness. Big Boston is larger and does well in frames but takes about eight days longer than Boston Market to mature. Another first-class lettuce that matures about the same time as the Big Boston is Deacon. This is the best standing variety we have ever tried. Unless you want to cut your lettuce all about the same time I would advise you to try all three varieties. W. S. Croydon.

BEST TOMATO.

Which will be the best tomato to grow for early market, Lorillard or Earliana? We raise plants in pots and would be glad of advice. S. H. B.

You will not make any mistake in growing Earliana; it is a good all-round extra early variety. The fruit, though somewhat below average size, is uniformly smooth and well shaped. Early Freedom is also good, though rather small fruited. Lorillard has many good points as an extra early sort but with us in recent years has produced a number of badly shaped fruits. This is most pronounced in the first of the season; later on the fruits are better but as the earliest fruits are the ones for which the best price is obtained, this is a serious drawback to the Lorillard variety and we now grow Earliana and Freedom in preference.

W. S. Croydon.

LIQUID MANURE.

We will soon be out of the dull, short days, and the rays of Old Sol will begin to have a warmer feeling. All plants will soon begin to show fresh vigor and demand a more abundant supply of moisture. When the benches begin to dry out pretty frequently the time has arrived when occasional applications of liquid stimulants will be of benefit to such crops as are in a fit state to take it. There is a good deal in knowing just when it should be applied to certain plants, as if applied injudiciously, time and trouble are not only wasted, but more harm than good may result.

The forcing crops to which liquid manure is most beneficial are tomatoes, cucumbers and cauliflower. With any of these there is a danger of creating a soft growth if liquid stimulants are applied too early. If tomatoes and cucumbers are allowed to run to soft growth in the earlier stages, the setting of the fruit will be seriously interfered with. The time when the liquid will do the most good is after a good set of fruit has been procured; besides, it is at this time that the greatest strain is placed on the plants; hence the necessity for assistance by whatever stimulant can be most readily assimilated.

Manures in liquid form, being immediately available for plant food, are for this purpose much more preferable than solids. Solid ingredients, such as bone manures, are best added to the soil at the time of planting, and even then there is always a doubt in my mind whether the plants can sufficiently assimilate the food properties of these to make the application profitable, seeing that the season of growth is so short, but a few weeks being occupied from the time the plants are set in the soil until the crop is harvested and the plants have to be thrown out to give place to others. True, in some cases a second crop can be put in the same soil, but this is only the case with one of the subjects under consideration; namely, cauliflower. I consider it would be a foolish procedure to plant either tomatoes or cucumbers in soil in which the same crop had already been growing

My invariable stand-by for liquid is pulverized sheep manure. In this I may be a little old-fashioned, but I consider that this contains all the elements necessary for the purpose in hand in about as easily assimilable a form as they can possibly be applied. Sulphate of ammonia and nitrate of soda are both quick acting manures suitable for application in liquid form, being readily soluble in water. Usually about one ounce of either to four gallons of water will be about the right strength, but, as the strength varies, it is not always possible to judge of the exact amount necessary. The above quantity, however, can be given with safety, and the operator must judge for himself after the first two or three applications whether the strength can safely be increased.

My method of making liquid from pulverized sheep manure is to use about half a bag for a large barrel of water. After tying up the bag I put bag and all in the barrel. All the substance of the manure soaks through the bag, while the sediment is held back, thus giving a liquid that will pass readily through the soil without danger of clogging. If the manure is placed in the water at night, by next morning the liquid will be strong enough to use and may even want to be diluted. As the plants can only take up a limited quantity at a time, it is better to err on the safe side and apply it weak rather than too strong, increasing the strength as the plants show a capacity for taking it. No hard and fast rule regarding strength can be laid down, and only by observing the effect on the plants can the operator tell when they are getting enough or when they are getting too much. About twice a week is usually often enough to apply the liquid, but this must be regulated according as the plants dry out. They should have two or three applications of clear water between each application of liquid manure. W. S. Croydon.

Richfield Springs, N. Y.—Leander P. Seaton is dead, aged 58 years. He had been in poor health for some time and the business has been conducted by Mrs. Seaton, who survives with six children.

BREEDERS TO MEET.

The American Breeders' Association will hold its second annual meeting at the Illinois College of Agriculture at Champaign February 1 to 3. The U. S. Secretary of Agriculture is president of the association and the meeting is deemed of such importance that the program is sent to the press with an official note from the Department of Agriculture. The breeding of both plants and animals will be discussed. C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y., is on the program for an illustrated address on "Carnation Breeding" and Luther Burbank, Santa Rosa, Cal., is announced to speak on "Heredity." H. H. Groff, Simcoe, Ont., will discuss "Plant Improvement by Hybridization," and there will be numerous addresses of a horticultural or agricultural interest.

THE CHATHAM WAGON EXPRESS

The wagon express between Chatham, N. J., and New York City has just completed its second year of constant service. In warm weather and cold, by moonlight and through fogs, in dark nights and stormy ones, this wagon never fails every evening to visit the various greenhouses about Chatham, distributing the "empties" and collecting the day's crop of flowers.

During the wee small hours of every night, Saturday only excepted, the wagon with its fragrant load is traversing the lonely country roads and the quiet streets of Newark and Jersey City. Every morning finds it coming up the avenues of New York, arriving at the first commission houses in Twenty-sixth street promptly at seven o'clock. Even the storms of the past winter have not delayed it; its delivery has always been prompt and its tender goods never touched by frost. There have been times when, for miles, the night snows have been untrodden and this team and wagon has had to "break the road."

By this method the Chatham growers are saved the expense of going to the railroad station with their several lots of goods. At their very doors they are relieved of them and right there they have the satisfaction of seeing them sheltered at once for the journey. And, unlike the railroad method, they are kept sheltered all the way to the wholesale houses in New York. By an intelligent use of a smaller or larger number of lighted lanterns, these perishable goods are kept just cool enough; but never allowed to get frostbitten.

There are, of course, relays of horses and the men who assemble the various consignments from Madison and other neighborhoods are relieved at Summit by other men who accompany the loads through the rest of the night to their destinations. In these days of railroads this method may appear primitive. But railroads never start from one's house and do not cross ferries nor keep their goods sheltered and carry them up city streets to destination. This is surely an instance where adopting again the methods of the past has proved to be progressive and up-to-date. M. H. N.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Werick Bros., at Pine Ridge, are planning to increase their glass this spring.

Birmingham, Ala.—William Lindsay takes a very optimistic view of the future. He will add several greenhouses to his plant this spring.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The first fifteen days of January were without doubt one of the dullest fortnights in the history of this market. The next week saw considerable improvement and by Saturday the wholesale district had its old air of life, with stock well cleaned up. Shipping trade has shown an increase and the city demand is once more fair, the two combined bringing a very satisfactory business and the best since Christmas.

There is no decided change in the situation with regard to Beauties. The crops are gradually diminishing and quality nothing extra. Brides and Maids, however, are of unexcelled quality and there is a smaller proportion of the unavailable stock than usual. Active demand has resulted in a further stiffening in the price and extra select stock is now fetching better money than usual at this season, with the lower grades also making a good average. Liberties are less abundant and the cut of Chatenay is lighter than at any time this winter, although some splendid stock is seen.

The carnation market has taken what might almost be called a boom. Practically everything but the splits and culls are cleaned up on receipt and the buyers who are late in getting into the market do not always get their orders filled in full. Many growers are holding back for Friday and Saturday. The stock in general averages exceptionally good grade.

The receipts of violets continue heavy and prices weak. Romans and Paper Whites are doing a little better than they did. Harrisii clean out fairly well, but callas are quite abundant. Considerable quantities of tulips are seen, but most are too short stemmed to be greatly in demand. Stevia is done. There are considerable quantities of sweet peas but not of extra quality. Green goods have a fairly steady sale, with adiantum good property.

Carnation Prices.

There is a good deal of uncertainty as to what carnations will be worth at the end of this week. Last year McKinley day cut some little figure and so much has been said about it this year that the growers have the idea that they ought to get pretty good money. But the wholesalers are not disposed to force prices up until this very commendable way of observing the anniversary of Mr. McKinley's birth is a little more firmly established. However, supply and demand will govern on this occasion, as always. Good weather on Sunday is pretty sure to see a very heavy retail demand. What the wholesale demand on Friday and Saturday will be is more or less problematical. It is sure to be good; it may be enormous. But growers are hoarding stock and the result is in doubt. The wise man has sent his cut in each day and got excellent prices.

The Winandy Matter.

There was a meeting of thirty-two creditors of Michael Winandy at the office of Weber & Kranz on January 19, at which $65,000 of claims were represented. It was agreed to continue the business under the direction of Peter Reinberg and Henry Kranz, it being thought that by this course enough might be realized to meet the liabilities and possibly put Mr. Winandy on his feet again.

Various Notes.

The George Wittbold Co. will add two houses to its plant at Edgebrook this spring and will plant seven 150-foot houses to carnations and roses for next season. They will grow Brides, Maids, Richmond and a few Beauties in roses, Lady Bountiful, White Lawson, Fiancee and either Estelle or Cardinal in carnations, with some older sorts which they already have at the city place.

E. H. Hunt is putting up To-bak-ine Liquid in kegs to meet the needs of the big growers. He sold Emil Buettner a ten-gallon keg and Wietor Bros. a twenty-gallon keg. Each keg is fitted with a faucet, the handle of which has a lock and will not turn until the lock is released with a key which belongs in the foreman's pocket. This is because To-bak-ine Liquid is worth $15 a gallon. It is pure nicotine.

The E. Wienhoeber Co. speaks highly of E. G. Hill's new rose, Rosalind Orr English. Peter Reinberg has a few of the plants on trial and Wienhoeber gets the cut. They like the color and the way it opens and the customers like the way it keeps.

L. Coatsworth, of the Benthey-Coatsworth Co., spent last week at the company's plant at New Castle, looking over the ground preparatory to determining the season's building operations.

Wietor Bros. are cutting a very fine lot of Chicago, the Red Bradt. They say it is a great producer and they like it better than any other red.

J. A. Budlong is very well pleased with the world these days, for he has a big cut of Brides and Maids of extra quality just when he wants them.

Visitors at the J. D. Thompson place at Joliet say that Robert Craig carnation is looking very good indeed. There will be many to look at it the latter part of the week.

Both the Benthey-Coatsworth Co. and C. W. McKellar have rearranged matters to get more office space and have that department in nice shape.

Leopold Koropp will conduct the Asmus & Co.'s place under the name of the Sheridan Park Floral Co. and will incorporate.

Vaughan & Sperry are getting some Princess of Wales violets that would be hard to beat. They bring as much as the best Marie Louise.

Emil Buettner will add three houses 30x125 to his plant this spring.

Mrs. Leonard Kill has been quite ill for several weeks but is improving slowly.

O. W. Frese has been on the sick list for a few days.

John Thorpe is reported to be engaged upon a series of articles on trade topics for the Sunday Tribune.

HE HAS BEEN SHOWN!

FLINT, MICH.

We are having a mild winter, which is making a great saving in fuel, but this item does not hit us as hard as it does some, for we burn Michigan coal and find it very good and at quite a little lower figure than eastern coal.

We have three florists here. B. Hasselbring's remodeled place is in very fine shape and up-to-date. He grows carnations, roses, bedding stock, etc. George Evans has not a large place but grows some very good stuff and is prospering finely. D. P. Smith does a general business.

Trade was very good here at the holidays and is holding up nicely since.

And we all read the REVIEW.

OCEANIC, N. J.

The semi-monthly meeting of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society was held January 20. Visitors were Messrs. Charles Totty, Madison; Alfred Richards, New York, and Anton Bauers and John Schackla, Deal Beach, N. J. G. H. Hale exhibited some Primula obconica grandiflora and grandiflora rubra for which he received ninety points. William Turner showed some very fine carnations, Harlowarden, Enchantress and Gov. Wolcott, which scored eighty-five points. H. A. Kettel was asked how he raised such fine tulips at such an early date as December 15, with stems nine inches and over. He explained that when they are boxed he leaves them outside without any covering for about three or four weeks. Then he puts them in a cool cellar and covers them with about a foot of salt hay. When he puts them in the house he covers them with an empty box to draw them. The society decided to hold its annual ball on February 10. Remarks were made by Charles Totty, Alfred Richards, H. A. Kettel, N. Butterbach, A. G. Williams and others. The judges of the evening were W. W. Kennedy, A. G. Williams and Percy Hicks. B.

IN A DAY'S MAIL.

Enclosed is check for $2 for which extend my subscription for two years.—B. S. Meyers, Lancaster, N. Y.

There are $2 enclosed; make it cover 1906.—John G. Esler, Saddle River, N. J.

Here are $2 in payment for subscription two years in advance.—A. W. Smith, Pittsburg, Pa.

Enclosed find check for $2 to pay for the Review for the next two years.—Charles E. Smith, York, Pa.

The considerable number of subscribers who, in renewing, send $2 to pay for two years in advance, afford a considerable satisfaction to the editor, for it indicates a very general appreciation that the REVIEW is well worth reading every week and a confidence that its standard will be maintained; we hope to be able to advance it.

WATSEKA, ILL.—Marshall Wyatt is getting a very fine cut of carnations and expects big business for McKinley day.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions show a distinct improvement all around as compared with a week ago. The weather has been clear and bright in the main, with temperatures most of the time more like April than January. While this has increased the output in some lines, the demand has greatly improved and markets have cleaned out very nicely.

Brides and Bridesmaids are scarcer and prices considerably advanced, extra good stock bringing as high as $20 per hundred. Beauties and other roses are all coming in lessened quantities. Carnations are moving at last week's quotations and there seems to be no surplus. Violets have recovered from the slump of a week ago and sell at better prices, singles fetching 50 to 75 cents and doubles 50 and 60 cents per hundred.

Romans and Paper Whites have sold much better, there being a heavy demand for funeral work. Tulips have sold at $4 and yellow trumpet narcissus at $5. Lily of the valley remains about the same. Freesia is coming in more plentifully. Asparagus Sprengeri is less plentiful. Few of the small and cheaper bunches are now seen. Adiantum cuneatum fronds are also rather scarce at present.

Various Notes.

Theodore F. Borst, consulting forest engineer of Boston, was the lecturer at Horticultural Hall on January 21, his subject being "Forest Planting for Profit," which was very fully and intelligently treated.

Mrs. Oliver Ames, of North Easton, will offer special prizes for fifty blooms of Rose Mrs. Oliver Ames at the coming meeting of the American Rose Society in Boston. M. H. Walsh, of Woods Hole, also offers a special prize.

J. Newman & Sons' store was broken into on the night of January 15 and goods to the value of $75 stolen. While the thief, or thieves, have not yet been caught, suspicions point to the guilty parties.

John O'Brien, who recently left Carbone's flower store, opened a store on his own account at 288 Boylston street on January 23. He has engaged Miss Wrenn as bookkeeper. A good stand and an excellent knowledge of the busines should insure him success in his new venture.

William A. Hastings, salesman for Homer Rogers, of South Sudbury, has been quite sick with diphtheria, but at last report was somewhat improved.

The fine collection of plants belonging to W. P. Windsor, of Fairhaven, will be sold in a few weeks. Peter Murray has had charge of Mr. Windsor's place for over fifteen years and his annual exhibition each February has always been attended by many of the craft. Orchids are well done here. Dendrobiums and odontoglossums particularly so. The plants will be sold after the annual exhibition about the end of February. Mr. Murray meditates hiring the plant and running it on a commercial basis.

The stall holders at the new market presented $106 to the widow of the late James Denning, salesman for the Budlong Co., a few days ago.

George Solomon, for some time with N. F. McCarthy & Co., has left the employ of that firm.

Wellesley Rose seems to grow in popularity at the stores. Orders for plants are coming to the Waban Conservatories in a very satisfactory manner.

Lilacs in pots and cut are in great favor at the stores at present.

Doyle has been displaying some nice Acacia pubescens.

Peter Murray's new seedling carnation, Windsor, has been bought by the F. R. Pierson Co.

William Spillsbury is shipping 5,000 to 6,000 very fine Princess of Wales violets to the Park street market.

We are glad to report that J. T. Butterworth's condition is now much more satisfactory.

Norton decorated for the boot and shoe manufacturers' banquet at the Brunswick on January 18, at which Governor W. L. Douglas was one of the guests of honor.

Galvin had the decorations at the Somerset on January 18 for the Phillips-Metzler wedding reception. They used a large quantity of choice material.

W. N. Craig.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The tone was not very encouraging the past week among the leading retailers up and down town. The wholesale markets were greatly overstocked and were so still on Monday. Even first grade was in oversupply, which is seldom the case, as this stock always has first call when the market is glutted, as it has been. The trade is in hopes that these conditions will change for the better next month and continue so until Lent sets in.

Social affairs with large decorations are unknown and smaller affairs are not numerous. There were quite a number of deaths the past week and when one of us was busy it was with that kind of work. The three wholesale houses carried considerable more stock than the demand called for and, of course, prices had to suffer a big cut in large lots. Some of our large growers will not like the looks of their statements when they receive them by the first of the month. It may be that the Growers' Club, which is about to organize, and from which retailers and wholesalers are excluded, will try to remedy this state of affairs.

Stock in a few lines is having some call, especially white carnations and roses. There are plenty of all grades of Beauties to be had, also Maids, Meteors, Liberties and Perles. Brides are in demand. Prices on small lots remain as quoted last week. Carnations in the colored sorts are a glut, especially in pink and red. White, as in roses, has the call. Good colored stock sold as low as $1 per hundred the past week.

Romans, Paper Whites, valley, Harrisii and callas are very abundant. Romans have hardly any value at present. Violets, too, are more than the demand can use, $3.50 to $4 per thousand being considered a fair price for fresh stock. There are plenty of greens with slow demand.

Various Notes.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, paid us a visit the past week. Fred is an enthusiast over the carnation meeting this week. He also paid a visit to Henry Aue's place at Lindenwood, where some fancy carnations are grown.

C. Young & Sons Co. have issued their spring catalogue, which is a beauty and very attractive with colored plates.

H. J. Weber & Sons Nursery Co., at Gardenville, St. Louis county, has let contracts for two new houses 25x250. These houses are for growing roses for the local trade.

The committee which will have charge of thecarnation exhibition at the next club meeting held a meeting Monday, and a list of prizes was made up, $25 being set aside for the local growers and $25 for outside growers. A list of these will be sent out by the secretary next week to all carnation growers. The committee on constitution and by-laws will meet this week to revise the constitution, which is to be reported at the next club meeting. The committee on club house has several sites in view for the proposed building. An interesting report is expected at the next meeting.

On Thursday night nineteen growers met at Louisiana Hall for the purpose of organizing an association to be known as the St. Louis Plant Growing and Flower Association. A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws. Your correspondent, not being eligible to membership, cannot give a full account of what all transpired, but the number who attended is correct.

In the St. Louis party who left Tuesday night for Chicago to attend the convention of the American Carnation Society, there were about fifteen. A challenge from the Chicago Bowling Club for a game on Wednesday night could not be accepted, as only one or two of the bowlers attended.

Recent visitors were R. Stern, of Philadelphia; J. O'Neil, Chicago; Joseph Rolker and A. Meyer, of New York.

J. J. B.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market during the past week showed signs of steadiness, with a firm and upward tendency, except in the violet department, which was most discouraging; 50 cents per hundred for specials seemed to be top and the ordinary goods were cleaned up at the buyers' option. Great quantities were disposed of as low as $2.50 per thousand. Not very encouraging news for the Rhinebeck builders, but they will build nevertheless. Yale folks seem to have soured on the violet. The big florists from New Haven were in town Saturday cutting and countermanding orders "to beat the band."

There are not too many roses and the best of them hold their top price well. Quality is now superb and color perfect. Carnations come in millions. Prices are naturally wabbly under these conditions, but good stock never fails to command fair values. Orchids are quite equal to the demand. McManus is handling some twenty fine varieties. The shipping to other cities grows more encouraging every week. There is an abundance of bulbous stock and lilacs, sweet peas and mignonette. The latter retrogrades yearly in popularity. Forsythia and other forcing shrubs are already in evidence. The coming of spring is foreshadowed everywhere and two long, weary months of winter still on tap.

The public of New York city will be educated by the time Sunday arrives to the fact that McKinley day is here. Every wholesaler has a handsome card announcement of the memorial. If Brother Altick could walk through the New York streets today he would have ample evidence that his enthusiasm has borne fruit. Saturday should be a great day for carnation growers in the big city and everywhere through the land. That it will be, is sure by the flood of advance orders already received by the wholesalers.

Among the retailers there are universal indications of satisfaction with the present condition of trade. Everybody is busy. Dinners, parties, balls and weddings are abundant. The automobile show drew society in thousands. The wearing of flowers was excessive. Great events close at hand are the Old Guard's ball, the Arion and the Emerald, all of which many thousands will attend. Unique floral decorations will characterize all these events. Hanft Bros. will, of course, handle the Arion decorations, as they have done for a generation.

Various Notes.

The next meeting of the club, February 13, will be a record breaker. A prominent carnationist will read a paper. There will be a grand display of all the new carnations. The ladies will attend in large numbers and the house committee will give them a royal welcome. It will be Scotch night, with the assistance of John Birnie's young ladies and much other talent.

F. R. Pierson was in the city Saturday and completed arrangements with Guttman & Weber for the control of the new red carnation, Victory. The daily papers will now have more to say of "frenzied floriculture" and I have no doubt will give "Millionaire" Pierson credit for having paid $25,000 at least for his latest capture.

The outing committee of the New York Club held its first meeting on Saturday, elected officers and perfected arrangements for the summer festival. Messrs. Traendly, Birnie, Elliott, Schenck, Schmutz, Langjahr and Shaw were present.

The Hoboken Bowling Club has reorganized with a membership of sixteen and the new officers are: Dietz, president; Grundmann, secretary, and Steinhoff, treasurer, with John Birnie master of ceremonies.

George Saltford has the la grippe and Charles Millang has had a severe attack. Wm. Ford has been fighting his old enemy, lumbago. J. K. Allen had a hard tussle with the demon. In fact it would be easier to make a list of those who have escaped.

Pneumonia caused the death of the father of Jos. J. Levy on Friday. His friends in the wholesale trade extend their sympathy.

Mrs. Derby, of Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, whose husband once worked for James Mallon, mourns the loss of her son, who died last week.

Mrs. Richard F. Jenkins, wife of the florist at 664 Eighth avenue, died last week of consumption, handsome designs of flowers being sent to the funeral by the wholesalers, Traendly & Schenck, Ford Bros. and John J. Perkins.

Fenrich is handling large quantities of forsythia and some 36-inch Brides and Maids that are eye openers.

John J. Perkins is decorating and remodeling his store on West Thirtieth street, so that it looks very attractive.

Elliott & Sons are preparing for an early season. No wonder, for half the last week was springlike and mild enough for gardening. These are the days "between hay and grass" but the revival is close at hand. The bulb houses all seem to be satisfied with the success of their "commercial travelers," as William Scott now calls them, reporting a flood of orders as the result of their canvass.

President Traendly was prevented by illness from attending the Chicago convention, much to his regret. The attendance from the east was a scattered one, no special route being chosen.

W. H. Johnson, who has had charge of the greenhouses at Sing Sing prison for some time, and a brother of the warden, died of paralysis on Friday, aged 54. He was born in Greenwich, Conn., and was supervisor of Rye for some years. A wife, son and two daughters survive him.

Bowling.

January 18 the return match between Flatbush and New York was rolled, nine members of each team participating. New York won with a majority of 405 pins in the two games, so that with the exception of the little accident at Madison, the New Yorkers still have an unbeaten record. On January 27 they will wipe out this little blot on their escutcheon. From present indications New York will send as strong a team to Washington as has ever represented this city at a convention. Flatbush treated her guests, as usual, with lavish hospitality. The score follows:

FROSTS IN FRANCE.

Cables from Paris have reported in the past month unusual frosts in southern France and in the Riviera. Great hardship has been brought upon the flower growers in this usually favored region and their loss will run into a vast sum of money, being particularly heavy in the San Remo district. Government aid has been necessary in some sections.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The tone of the market is much better. There is good demand for nearly all kinds of flowers at fair prices. The average of quality is higher, owing to last week's sunshine. There has been a heavy demand for whites, due to funeral work, some weddings and decorations. For these occasions the Leo Niessen Co. sold many choice callas, white lilacs, La Reine tulips, freesias and white carnations. Brides and Bridesmaids have been scarce, but both Leo Niessen and S. S. Pennock have had a fair supply of fancy stock. Medium Beauties are also scarce, Liberties more plentiful and very finc. Carnations are not quite so plentiful and in good demand. Freesias, "daffs" and tulips are coming in more freely. Dendrobium formosum and cypripediums are about over. Violets are poor stock despite fine quality. Greens are selling well, especially Asparagus plumosus sprays.

An Experiment.

The REVIEW, undoubtedly the most progressive paper of the day, is this week trying an "experiment" in the notes headed "In the Shops." The success of this experiment will depend on the hearty co-operation of the retailers themselves. The notes will appear at frequent intervals, provided material can be secured. Perhaps you will think these shop notes are of little account. Very likely, but was your shop of much account when you started? Hardly. Then telephone or write Phil what you are doing. Give him a chance to do good work.

In the Shops.

Robert Crawford, Jr., makes a point of keeping his handsome show windows gay with the prettiest flowers and blooming plants. Among the latter, the place of honor was given to some very well grown Primula Buttercup in large pans. Mr. Crawford does not believe in business that increases at the rate of fifty per cent each year, but simply says he has been very busy.

Charles P. Poryzees is making a success of his new place, opened last fall. He has a theory that a stormy Saturday and Sunday usually precede a busy Monday, but that if Sunday is fair, Monday is apt to be a dull day. This theory is based on the idea that when the young men can't be riding or walking in the open air with their sweethearts they will send them flowers as a love token.

James M. Thoirs is doing much to elevate the taste of Camden's citizens by giving them new ideas of floral beauty.

Charles Fox takes advantage of the possibilities of his place of busines by unique and tasteful floral decorations. Many people have gained ideas of what will do well in the house by their visits to Mr. Fox. In a very fine wedding decoration last week Easter lilies were a prominent feature.

George Craig keeps his counter gay with carnations. Some well grown daffodils and freesias in pots were very attractive.

Hugh Graham has been quick to realize the possibilities of educating the people, through the medium of the department stores, to love plants. Mr. Graham has made a careful study of this branch of the business. Through his efforts, and those of others, a new field is rapidly being developed.

A Philadelphian who recently returned from abroad, says that the number and beauty of the Paris flower shops astonished him. Even in the poorer quarters of the city these shops were found looking like oases in the desert. Great attention is paid to the windows, the displays being arranged with exquisite taste.

The Century Flower Shop has been taking advantage of the fine weather to push flowering plant sales. Good old-fashioned geraniums in 4-inch pots were one of their specialties.

The William Graham Co. had the decorations for the Radnor Hunt Ball at Horticultural Hall. Wild smilax was freely used. Long American Beauties, Liberties and scarlet carnations harmonized with the scarlet coats of the huntsmen. The effect was very fine.

The new Merganthaler store in Germantown has been making a window feature of pretty flowering plants.

Various Notes.

It is learned on good authority that John and Harry Berger, trading as Berger Brothers, wholesale florists, at 1220 Filbert street, will next Wednesday remove their business to the Flower Market, 1237 Filbert street, where they have secured space.

John Burton has decided to tear down and rebuild the greenhouses on the Lonsdale property purchased last spring. These houses have not proved satisfactory and Mr. Burton is perfecting plans to put the plant in good shape. Glass has been purchased, the size of the place will be increased and estimates are being prepared for the roofing material.

The contract for the new building of M. Rice & Co. was given out on Monday. The building will be fireproof and one of the most complete of its kind in America. It is to be finished the middle of May, the builder being under a heavy penalty for each day's delay.

Samuel S. Pennock is distributing very neatly gotten up McKinley day cards among the retailers. On the right is a picture of the martyred president, on the left a boutonniere of a single scarlet carnation and a couple of long-stemmed flowers of the same color. The idea is that the retailers will hang the cards in their shops to stimulate interest in the observance of McKinley day, which falls on Sunday next.

William J. Baker is handling some nice freesia, also fine Enchantress and Mrs. Patten.

R. C. Hayden, who is absent on account of illness from his office at the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co., is greatly missed by his business friends, who hope he will soon be about again. Manager Muth is pleased over the improvement in the tone of the market in general and of the carnation market in particular.

A local florist who advertised for a place to rent, was surprised to receive an answer from a neighbor, who not knowing the advertiser's name, described his property with unnecessary accuracy.

Harry Crawford states that the Philadelphia Carnation Co. has just turned the steam on its new stock house. They have 50,000 cuttings in the sand. The crops, both of carnations and mushrooms, have been excellent.

J. William Colflesh has been sending in some well grown freesia in 6-inch pots, rather a rarity now.

Henry C. Woltemate's friends will be glad to know that he is having a good season.

Edward Reid is a man of versatile abilities. He can not only sell flowers well, but he can without legal aid present his facts in a manner so clear and forceful that even the attorney for the other side has been known to throw up his case without going into court.

A. Leuthy, head of the Boston firm that bears his name, was in this city last week. He visited Joseph Heacock, at Wyncote, and Edward Drown, at Hillside, and was seen heading towards Riverton. Mr. Leuthy reports a good Christmas.

Roses and Carnations A Specialty..... WHOLESALE GROWER of CUT FLOWERS

Walter M. Yates is not able to keep up with the demand for Easter lilies, though he has turned nearly his whole place into these bulbs. The stock looks well, the greatest difficulty being in getting long stems on the early blooms.

NORTH CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

Still another evidence of the thoughtfulness for the welfare and pleasure of the employes of A. H. Hews & Co. and the peculiarly family-like bond of cooperative interest existing between employers and employed at this establishment, the largest of its kind in the country, if not in the world, was shown at the banquet and entertainment given to the employes January 14 by Mrs. Albert H. Hews, widow of the former owner, in commemoration of Mr. Hews' birthday.

At the close of the banquet the gathering was addressed by Geo. H. McKee, president, and Philip Cabot, treasurer of the present corporation, the latter speaking directly for Mrs. Hews and expressing her deep desire to continue that interest always maintained by Mr. Hews in the employes, individually and collectively, many of whom have been continuously in the service for over a generation and who by their competent and faithful service in their respective positions had been of such material assistance to him in building to its present magnitude the establishment which today stands as a monument to his honorable dealings with all men and to his business ability.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

We have just completed a good week's business, everyone seemed to be busy and several of the larger firms had all they could handle comfortably. Good roses have continued scarce since the holidays and have held up in price. Carnations have also been somewhat scarce this week and, while some stock sold very cheap, the average price was better. We are now beginning to see more spring flowers in the stores, freesias, daffodils and better tulips, all of which found fair sale the past week. Violets and lilac, however, are among the things which, while the stock has improved in quality, are lower in price. Lilies are very scarce in this section, Harrisii proving almost a failure. While such blooms as they do give are not worth much, the result has been that callas find a better sale than usual.

Various Notes.

There were quite a number from this section at the carnation convention, but they did not go as a party.

The rent question is getting to be quite a serious matter among our retailers, and if it gets much worse will drive some of them to the side streets. Anything below $4,000 is cheap now, while most of them almost double that amount and none of them has more than a store room and a cellar. The wholesalers are somewhat better off, although to keep rents down to a living price the Florists' Exchange and J. B. Murdoch & Co. are compelled to rent upstairs rooms. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. fortunately made a long lease which runs for several years. However, the the whole block has recently been purchased by a speculator and they may be induced to move before their lease expires.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., by way of advertisment, is sending its customers the Daniel B. Long, McKinley day, lithographed card, calling attention to carnations for January 29. HOO HOO.

ENNIS, TEX.—Chas. M. Hall reports that business has been and is good, but that a long continued drouth is having its effect.

THE HOLIDAY AFTERMATH.

The aftermath of the holiday trade generally brings out a few facts that are worthy of note. It is significant that many of our patrons who annually make considerable purchases, are always on the alert for something out of the common or possessing some originality of design. How many of them have their desires gratified it is hard to state, but this we know, that a good floral basket or hamper generally catches the eye and seldom goes begging, especially if its contents or general make up is not of the every-day kind. Of course, the formal box of cut flowers will always be in vogue and probably lead in floral offerings, but to create additional trade, which we are all after, we must get out of traditional ruts and furnish something that will gratify the wants of an exacting public. This want is fully as noticeable in house decorations for marriage and funeral occasions as it is at holiday time and to partially overcome this apparent deficiency I would recommend getting back to nature, whose resources are so bountiful and well adapted to our wants.

While entertaining ideas on this subject for some time, and having them pressed upon my observation by the facial expressions of our patrons with far more significant force than language could imply, their remarks were made suggestive by having on hand a liberal supply of nature's products from various sources left over from holiday trade, which have been used since then in various floral work to good advantage. From California we get the pepper-scented tree with its waxy red berries. This is becoming a commercial article. From the mountains of Oregon comes the Mahonia bush, in green and red colors, beautifully formed leaves of lasting quality and well adapted to various arrangements in floral work. Also coming from this country is a large form of the dagger fern, much superior to the variety from the Berkshire hills and from experience up to date a good keeper. The fronds run as long as three feet; one of the best of the aspidiums. We also get from this country a shrub sent under the name of huckleberry bush, resembling the cotoneaster in branch and foliage, a good keeper and quite decorative.

The trade is well acquainted with the resources of the mountainous districts of the Carolinas and other southern states, as well as the woods of Alabama, from which districts we get so many forms of shrubs and vines which are gradually becoming so desirable and the extensive use of which will not to any extent interfere with the use of our greenhouse products. Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

CREDITORS of the Missouri Valley Seed Co., St. Joseph, Mo., have asked for a receiver.

THE canner's convention will call many seedsmen to Columbus, O., February 7 to 10.

IN a number of sections weather conditions have been unfavorable to the curing of sweet corn.

THE Dutch Bulb Growers' Association invites all interested Americans to visit the quinquennial exhibition at Haarlem, March 17 to 21.

THE Dutch bulb salesmen were abroad in the land much earlier than usual this season and it looks as though their intention is to go through the country with a fine-toothed comb.

AN eastern seed house is reported to be about to introduce a new amaryllis raised by Luther Burbank.

WITH the government supplying the demand for free seeds and the department stores and the big general mail-order houses catering to the "price" buyers, it looks as though the "quality" customer will soon be the only one left for the legitimate seedsman.

PROF. JOHN T. STIMSON, who was Superintendent of Horticulture at the St. Louis World's Fair, is now president of the Planters' Seed Co., Springfield, Mo. F. W. Maas, secretary of the company spent the exposition period in charge of the Deming Company's exhibit of sprayers.

BULB STORAGE.

The accompanying illustration shows the new bulb storage house recently completed by Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., and, as the capacity is 18,000 bushels, gives some idea of the development in the gladiolus industry. Mr. Cowee has two other storage houses, bringing his total warehousing capacity up to 26,000 bushels.

Arthur Cowee's New House for Gladiolus Storage.

IT is, indeed, an exceptional catalogue that does not list a dozen or so "novelties" this year. May they all prove their claims to distinction.

IN addition to the many industries at Zion City, Ill., John Alexander Dowie has gone into the seed business, the Horticultural Supply Department having just issued a very neat catalogue of thirty-two pages.

IT is reported that Geo. Weston, formerly in charge of the poultry department of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, has taken a position with Sears, Roebuck & Co. to help manage their new seed department.

EUGENE FUNK, of Funk Bros. Seed Co., Bloomington, Ill., is chairman of the membership committee of the American Breeders' Association and will have a good report to make at the meeting at Champaign, Ill., February 1 to 3.

W. H. METSON, one of the growers of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., has been appointed San Francisco park commissioner by Mayor Smitz. The appointment is considered a good one, as Mr. Metson has been a commissioner of Yosemite park for some years past.

PREPARATIONS are being made to have the coming annual convention of the canners and packers at Columbus, O., the best ever. The seedsmen are called upon to do their part and the canners promise to buy seed peas without expecting a quart of wax beans as a premium.

A WELL known seed salesman explains that the right way to get business from the eastern buyer is to pretend that you are on a pleasure trip and call simply out of courtesy. A different method succeeds best with the western buyer, the right way in his case being to wire in advance the time your train will reach his town and advise him that he can hand his order into lower six of the Pullman sleeper.

IT seems hard for the average farmer to realize that seeds have any value. If he sends in an order for 100 pounds of timothy seed from which the seeds-

THE HOLIDAY AFTERMATH.

The aftermath of the holiday trade generally brings out a few facts that are worthy of note. It is significant that many of our patrons who annually make considerable purchases, are always on the alert for something out of the common or possessing some originality of design. How many of them have their desires gratified it is hard to state, but this we know, that a good floral basket or hamper generally catches the eye and seldom goes begging, especially if its contents or general make up is not of the every-day kind. Of course, the formal box of cut flowers will always be in vogue and probably lead in floral offerings, but to create additional trade, which we are all after, we must get out of traditional ruts and furnish something that will gratify the wants of an exacting public. This want is fully as noticeable in house decorations for marriage and funeral occasions as it is at holiday time and to partially overcome this apparent deficiency I would recommend getting back to nature, whose resources are so bountiful and well adapted to our wants.

While entertaining ideas on this subject for some time, and having them pressed upon my observation by the facial expressions of our patrons with far more significant force than language could imply, their remarks were made suggestive by having on hand a liberal supply of nature's products from various sources left over from holiday trade, which have been used since then in various floral work to good advantage. From California we get the pepper-scented tree with its waxy red berries. This is becoming a commercial article. From the mountains of Oregon comes the Mahonia bush, in green and red colors, beautifully formed leaves of lasting quality and well adapted to various arrangements in floral work. Also coming from this country is a large form of the dagger fern, much superior to the variety from the Berkshire hills and from experience up to date a good keeper. The fronds run as long as three feet; one of the best of the aspidiums. We also get from this country a shrub sent under the name of huckleberry bush, resembling the cotoneaster in branch and foliage, a good keeper and quite decorative.

The trade is well acquainted with the resources of the mountainous districts of the Carolinas and other southern states, as well as the woods of Alabama, from which districts we get so many forms of shrubs and vines which are gradually becoming so desirable and the extensive use of which will not to any extent interfere with the use of our greenhouse products. AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

CREDITORS of the Missouri Valley Seed Co., St. Joseph, Mo., have asked for a receiver.

THE canner's convention will call many seedsmen to Columbus, O., February 7 to 10.

IN a number of sections weather conditions have been unfavorable to the curing of sweet corn.

THE Dutch Bulb Growers' Association invites all interested Americans to visit the quinquennial exhibition at Haarlem, March 17 to 21.

THE Dutch bulb salesmen were abroad in the land much earlier than usual this season and it looks as though their intention is to go through the country with a fine-toothed comb.

AN eastern seed house is reported to be about to introduce a new amaryllis raised by Luther Burbank.

WITH the government supplying the demand for free seeds and the department stores and the big general mail order houses catering to the "price" buyers, it looks as though the "quality" customer will soon be the only one left for the legitimate seedsman.

PROF. JOHN T. STIMSON, who was Superintendent of Horticulture at the St. Louis World's Fair, is now president of the Planters' Seed Co., Springfield, Mo. P. W. Maas, secretary of the company spent the exposition period in charge of the Deming Company's exhibit of sprayers.

BULB STORAGE.

The accompanying illustration shows the new bulb storage house recently completed by Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., and, as the capacity is 18,000 bushels, gives some idea of the development in the gladiolus industry. Mr. Cowee has two other storage houses, bringing his total warehousing capacity up to 26,600 bushels.

Arthur Cowee's New House for Gladiolus Storage.

IT is, indeed, an exceptional catalogue that does not list a dozen or so "novelties" this year. May they all prove their claims to distinction.

IN addition to the many industries at Zion City, Ill., John Alexander Dowie has gone into the seed business, the Horticultural Supply Department having just issued a very neat catalogue of thirty two pages.

IT is reported that Geo. Weston, formerly in charge of the poultry department of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, has taken a position with Sears, Roebuck & Co. to help manage their new seed department.

EUGENE FUNK, of Funk Bros. Seed Co., Bloomington, Ill., is chairman of the membership committee of the American Breeders' Association and will have a good report to make at the meeting at Champaign, Ill., February 1 to 3.

W. H. METSON, one of the growers of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., has been appointed San Francisco park commissioner by Mayor Smitz. The appointment is considered a good one, as Mr. Metson has been a commissioner of Yosemite park for some years past.

PREPARATIONS are being made to have the coming annual convention of the canners and packers at Columbus, O., the best ever. The seedsmen are called upon to do their part and the canners promise to buy seed peas without expecting a quart of wax beans as a premium.

A well known seed salesman explains that the right way to get business from the eastern buyer is to pretend that you are on a pleasure trip and call simply out of courtesy. A different method succeeds best with the western buyer, the right way in his case being to wire in advance the time your train will reach his town and advise him that he can hand his order into lower six of the Pullman sleeper.

IT seems hard for the average farmer to realize that seeds have any value. If he sends in an order for 100 pounds of timothy seed from which the seedsman realizes a profit of 15 cents on an out-lay of $3.85 he feels that he is entitled to a good bunch of vegetable and flower seeds in packets thrown in. The money expended by the government for the free distribution of seeds is certainly educating the farmer along this line.

Henry Field, Shenandoah, Ia., made a test last season of eighty-five varieties of field corn. All were planted May 17. The heaviest yield was White Elephant, but it took 105 days where eighty days sufficed for Pride of the North, Squaw, King Philip, Longfellow and Old's Mammoth Flints.

The supply of seeds of Cocos Weddelliana seems likely to be plentiful this season, and prices may go down rather than advance. I have not yet tested samples myself, but I hear they are very good. The seeds that come a little later on are perhaps the most reliable. March was always considered quite early enough to get well ripened samples, but I have seen them very good in February. Kentia seeds are also coming on the market in large quantities. Some which appear very fresh and plump are not sufficiently matured, and others which are a little too dry, if they have been well matured, will germinate well if handled properly. —H. T. J.

The week's reports from the onion set centers are to the effect that what sets were good at the time of storing for winter are still in prime shape. The weather so far this winter has not been so severe as it was last year; this has been a help. It is admitted, however, by the large operators that fewer good sets went into winter quarters last fall than for a number of years back. The orders for January and February shipment taken at low prices last August and September were not booked by the thoroughbreds. When there is scarcity of good stock at harvest time it is a safe guess that onion sets for spring delivery will bring good money. All indications point to high spring prices for all colors, with whites about double the price of red and yellow.

SEED TRADE AT ERFURT.

The following summary of conditions at Erfurt, Germany, is by the correspondent of the Horticultural Trade Journal, written at the beginning of the New Year:

The wholesale seed season is now well advanced, and a review of how business has been going will be of interest. Most of the large shipments to America, Australia and South Africa have been made, and now the various seed establishments are working at full pressure to supply the demands of Great Britain and other European countries, as well as the home market.

So far as can be judged at present, the sale of vegetable seeds has been quite up to the normal, or rather above it. The leading articles, such as cauliflower, carrot, beet, turnip, radish, parsley, tomatoes, etc., are all in brisk demand. Of spinach, some of the chief varieties are already exhausted, large consignments having gone to America. Beans have, as expected, in some cases run short, some of the dwarf kinds, such as Sion House, Osborne, and Magnum Bonum being all but sold out, while certain runners, such as Painted Lady, are not to be had for love or money. Onions are going well, some sorts, such as Zittau, already getting scarce. The germination has in some cases given trouble, owing to a too rapid ripening of the seed. Leeks are in good demand, and not much is likely to be left over. The same may be said of cucumber, many prime sorts being already cleared out. The call for lettuce is also good, prices being low, but stocks are large, and only Bath Cos has shown signs of giving out as yet.

Cabbages, on the other hand, are rather dull, especially the Drumhead sorts, and considerable stocks are likely to be left on hand. Mangel wurzels and grass seeds are also quiet, the demand, so far, being below the average.

As regards flower seeds, the demand has been about normal up to date. Among the vast number of varieties grown here, one or the other will naturally always be running short, but up to the present orders have, on the whole, been satisfactorily filled. The shortages caused by last year's drought, however, are now beginning to be felt, and orders for some sorts of nasturtiums, such as Lilliput, also marigolds, mammoth verbenas, etc., cannot be supplied in full, while Brompton stocks are already nearly sold out. As was expected, the supply of aster seed is also giving trouble, especially in the Victoria and Mignon sections, the stocks not nearly sufficing for the demand, notwithstanding the high prices, and customers have to be satisfied with only a portion of their requirements.

The weather thus far this winter has been far too mild to suit our seed growers, and a recent change to sharp cold (29 degrees Fahr.) excited hopes that the ground may thus be made in good condition for a fresh start in the spring.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

W. W. HAMMOND, nurseryman for thirty-five years at Bement, Ill., died of apoplexy January 15.

LARGE importations of roses from Holland are in a measure supplying the shortage on many kinds.

IT looks as though the wholesale growers of fruit trees would clean up next spring better than for several years.

A MR. GILBERT has bought 200 acres of land near Mason City, Ia., and announces his intention of starting a nursery.

E. F. STEPHENS, the well-known nurseryman of Crete, says western Nebraska is on the verge of a horticultural awakening.

T. V. MUNSON, Denison, Tex., will discuss "Breeding Grapes" and F. E. Beatty, Three Rivers, Mich., will tell of "Improvement of the Strawberry by Selection" at the meeting of the American Breeders' Association at Champaign, Ill., February 1 to 3.

THE newly elected officers of the Nebraska State Horticultural Society are: President, G. S. Christy, Johnson; first vice-president, C. S. Harrison, York; second vice-president, E. M. Pollard, Nehawka; secretary, L. M. Russel, Lincoln; treasurer, Peter Youngers, Geneva.

THOMAS KNIGHT, in commenting on the recent note on propagating Kalmia latifolia says that at Antwerp, Belgium, he has seen very fine stock propagated from layers. He says that there this is undoubtedly the best way of propagating this shrub but that the sandy soil which covers the northwestern part of Belgium is particularly suited for the purpose.

PARK SUPERINTENDENTS.

The executive committee of the American Association of Park Superintendents met in Springfield, Mass., January 18. It was decided that the next convention of the association shall be held in Buffalo June 28 to 30, and Messrs. J. F. Cowell, Buffalo; J. W. Duncan, Boston, and W. S. Egerton, Albany, were appointed a committee of arrangements. It is probable that arrangements will be made to visit Niagara Falls and Rochester at the same time. It was to be regretted that owing to sickness some of the active members of the committee were unable to be present. These included Robert Cameron, W. F. Gale and J. H. Hemingway. Several recommendations for changes in the by-laws were made and a committee was appointed to arrange for the publication of the bulletins of the association. Those attending the meeting were: Gustav Amhryn, New Haven, Conn.; J. W. Duncan and J. A. Pettigrew, Boston; Byron Worthen, Manchester, N. H.; J. F. Cowell, Buffalo; C. E. Keith, Bridgeport, Conn.; W. S. Egerton, Albany, N. Y.; Theodore Wirth, and G. A. Parker, Hartford, Conn.

SAVE THE TEAMING CHARGES.

That the recent enormous development of the florists' business was wholly unforeseen by those who had profited most by it is clearly shown by the locations of the principal plants. Up and down the country, not one in a dozen of the pioneers had the foresight to put the boiler shed beside the railroad track. Most of the new plants have side track facilities, but in the old days the quantities of fuel required were not so great as to make the cost of cartage a matter of importance. Nowadays, however, the possession of a sidetrack constitutes an enormous advantage; in a bad year it might almost make the difference between profit and loss. One grower recently stated that it cost him $1,000 a year to haul his coal, and there are dozens who spend several times this sum. Bassett & Washburn's big plant is a mile from the rails, and Peter Reinberg last season hauled 7,000 tons of coal about a quarter of a mile. Poehlmann Bros. Co., at Morton Grove, Ill., paid the railroad over $2,000 to get a switch built to their boiler shed, but they will get the money back by the saving in cartage in a single winter.

MONTREAL, QUE.—The Gardeners' and Florists' Club proposes to hold a carnation exhibition early in the next month. The club is in a most flourishing condition and making active preparations for entertaining the Canadian Horticultural Association, which meets here next September.

COLUMBUS, O.—The Columbus florists spent a very pleasant evening January 17, at their smoker, which was a great success. There was plenty of music, furnished by members, and recitations in German and colored dialect. Business cares were forgotten for the time being and everybody had a fine time and all hoped to have another such meeting in the near future.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade revived considerably during the past week and with it we notice a shortening in the supply of roses. Carnations are still coming in quite freely, while all kinds of bulb stock is becoming plentiful. We regret to note that tulips and daffodils are being sold at cut rate prices by our department stores so early in the season and it certainly looks bad for the grower who will force tulips at this season of the year and sell them so that they can be retailed at 15 to 18 cents per dozen. We notice a good demand for Enchantress, Lawson and good red. We also notice less complaint on the keeping quality of Enchantress this year thus far, or in fact this might be said of all varieties, but especially Enchantress which many thought last year was going to be a very poor keeper.

Various Notes.

Among the notable events of the past week we might mention the social evening given by the officers of the Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Club to the members and their wives. The affair was very enjoyable.

W. C. Jay, of Wm. Jay & Son, was married on January 18 to Miss Souter, of Buffalo. Mr. and Mrs. Jay have taken up their residence in Toronto in a beautiful new home. D. J.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Florists' Association Meets.

The State Florists' Association of Indiana held its annual meeting at the Commercial Club, January 17, and later in the day gave a show of carnations at the State House. The organization will give its support to the show to be held next fall, in Indianapolis, by the Indiana Floral Festival Association. The following officers were elected: President, Fred Lemon, Richmond; vice-president, Herman Junge, Indianapolis; second vice-president, John Rieman, Indianapolis; secretary, Fred Hukreide, Indianapolis; treasurer, John Heidenreich, Indianapolis. Executive committee, J. E. Haugh, Anderson; Gunnar Teilmann, Marion; J. A. Evans, Richmond, and E. A. Nelson and Adolph Baur, Indianapolis.

It was reported that the experiment station at Purdue University may be forced to close from lack of funds. A committee of florists was named to investigate the report, and, if it is found to be true, the state association will ask the legislature to give financial aid to the station.

The Bertermann Bros. Co. was awarded a certificate of merit for a new seedling carnation.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Bright, warm weather the past week has started things going again. There is a large amount of stock to choose from. Roses, carnations, sweet peas, violets and lilac are plentiful and of choice quality. Tulips and other bulbous stock are coming in and are selling well. Prices are about the same. There is very little sale for anything but choice stock. The implement dealers having left, the lumber dealers have come, thereby giving us more work. Collections are easier this year than for a number of years. Good prices are asked and cheerfully paid for good stuff, while poor stuff is either given away or thrown on the trash pile.

Various Notes.

W. H. Humfeld, who has been confined to his home by sickness, is able to be at his greenhouses again.

The foreign bulb growers' representatives have been among the growers here this week, one following the other in quick succession.

The Alpha Floral Co. is doing an immense business lately. Their store is always full and it is rumored that they intend to move shortly into a much larger place.

Simon Humfeld, of Muncie, Ind., has been visiting relatives here and incidentally looking up a location, with the view of establishing a wholesale plant in this vicinity. Mr. Humfeld expressed himself as well pleased with the outlook here and claims to have fallen in love with our Missouri climate and people.

Miss J. E. Murray reports business as brisk the past week and has had some large funeral orders.

W. L. Rock filled an order for funeral work from our neighboring city, Leavenworth, last week, which footed up a couple of hundred dollars.

Miss Dalley reports business better than a week ago, collections good and the outlook encouraging.

Geo. M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, is sending in some fine stock these days, principally roses, and has some very fine cyclamens on exhibition at his store here.

James Biggam is going among his friends with a box of cigars. It's a girl.

A. F. Barbe is growing some fine carnations and reports business as very good.

Among the visitors here the past week were W. A. Prosser, New York, and C. L. Knobe, Chicago. NARCISSUS.

HERE is my subscription to the REVIEW. I take great pleasure in sending it as it does not represent more than a small part of the value I receive therefrom.—FRANK H. WALRATH, Rochester, N. Y.

PLANTS FOR MOIST SITUATION.

In the center of a lake covering about two acres we have just built a plank box 10x12 and four feet high, filled with soil in which we intend to plant caladiums and cannas for the center, with salvias or geraniums for the body. The boards comprising the sides of the box extend from four to six inches above the surface of the water. These boards we desire to hide, covering with vines or running plants, which I presume necessarily would float in the water to some extent. Kindly tell me what would be desirable for this border. M. J. S.

If the surface of the soil is only four to six inches above the water we would not recommend the use of geraniums or salvias in the bed. One or two castor-oil plants might be used in the center; probably one good plant would suffice. Then some tall growing cannas, with some of the lower growing ones in front. If the caladiums are planted as a bordering their leaves would hang over and soon obscure the plank edging. Small flowering creepers could be used to form an edging, but such a bed calls for large leaved and bold plants. We would not advise the use of any small subjects. Some of the taller eulalias or other ornamental grasses would be very effective in such a bed. W. N. C.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have been treated with considerable rainy weather during the past week, which I find is not conducive to an increase in business. Everything in the flower line is plentiful enough to supply the demand, which is very limited at present. The growers are not cutting much stock and there is little call for anything except good roses. Beauties are selling wholesale at from $1 to $2.50 per dozen and Brides and Maids at from 35 to 75 cents per dozen. The weather has been so unfavorable that Liberties are not much in evidence and those that are cut are poor of stem and generally off color. Carnations are selling at about the same figure as last reported. Enchantress and Prosperity cost the stores 50 cents per dozen. We have had several large consignments of outdoor poinsettias from Los Angeles that sold wholesale at from $8 to $12 per hundred. Valley and Roman hyacinths are plentiful. Freesias and daffodils are coming in slowly and, narcissi are getting scarcer. Orchids are in good demand; so is Lilium Harrisii. Mums are holding out remarkably well, owing to our mild winter, and violets are still a drug. A few Marie Louise are seen but they are not yet at their best.

Various Notes.

The Shanahan Floral Co. is making a splendid display of ferns, azaleas, lilacs and bulbous stock in its Powell street store. It attracts considerable attention from the passers by.

D. Raymond, of San Jose, is introducing a new flower pot of his own manufacture, that is superior to anything made in this vicinity. It has found a ready sale with the growers here.

Richmond & Mills, of Fullerton, have shipped a carload of young orange trees to the local dealers.

The following unique advertisement is displayed in our daily papers by one of San Francisco's well known florists:

ROBBERY!

Any one asking more than fifty cents per dozen for Estelle, Crocker, Roosevelt, Schwerin or Hill carnations, or more than one dollar per dozen for Prosperity, Enchantress or any other Carnation, commits petty larceny. For particulars see SOIL DETERIORATION.

Because of their fear that the soil composing the peat beds in several parts of California, devoted to the raising of seeds and vegetables, is deteriorating at an alarming rate, growers have sent samples of the soil to the horticultural department of the State University at Berkeley for examination and analysis in the hope that remedies may be suggested for the salvation of this most important industry.

Professor Longbridge has received several samples of soil sent to the department by C. W. Cole, of Santa Ana, and also from a dozen other growers. The problem involved in the analysis especially of the soil devoted to the growing of celery is so delicate and difficult that Prof. Longbridge is loath to discuss it in advance of his tests, to be made at once. He believes, however, that the trouble with the soil in the peat districts is due to the presence of too much lime. This preponderance is likely to prove greatly injurious to the celery crop, affecting both its quality and volume.

Millions of dollars are represented in the output of the vegetable and seed growers, and with so much at stake, the proceedings of the chemistry branch of the University's agricultural department are being awaited by the men most interested with unusual concern.

The land in the peat beds of the south is different in formation, soil chemists say, from that of any other in the country. It was originally a great swamp, boggy and apparently worthless, covering a territory in Orange county that includes many thousand acres. A few years ago a practical vegetable grower from New Jersey saw the land in question, decided it was good for celery growing and purchased a large tract for a song. His success was immediate and there was at once a boom in the territory. Vegetable and seed growing became a great industry and the owners of the land became wealthy. The output of celery especially grew until hundreds of car loads were shipped annually from the district and its delicacy and ivory whiteness made it a favorite edible in the east.

To save this great industry or to prevent if possible the deterioration of the soil is now the task of Prof. Hilgard's corps of soil experts, of whom Prof. Longbridge is directly in charge.

CEMENT WALLS.

We are thinking of building cement walls next season. Will you please tell us something about them? K. B.

Having tried walls of cement, I do not favor them in the least, because they absorb too much moisture, which causes the frost to follow clear through the wall. If these are built double with a center air space, this of course will be obviated in a great measure but the expense will be considerably augmented.

The cost of such walls depends a great deal on local conditions. If the material, such as sand, gravel, etc., can be had with small cost of hauling, etc., the expense will be confined to the price of cement and labor, but even at the very lowest cost possible they cannot compare for greenhouse purposes with a well built board wall, finished with well matched siding. R.

PIPING REQUIRED.

How much 3-inch pipe will it take to heat a house 20x100 with hot water to keep a night temperature of 65 to 70 degrees? S. & Y.

Houses 20x100 will require 700 feet of 3-inch pipe to provide the necessary radiation to maintain the temperature desired with hot water at 180 degrees. Unless you have some special reason for using 3-inch pipe you will find it much more expensive than 2-inch to install. The amount of 2-inch pipe necessary to do the same work is 1,040 feet. If the 3-inch pipe costs 20 cents and the 2-inch 10 cents the 700 feet of 3-inch will cost $140 while the 1,040 feet of 2-inch will only cost $104 or $36 saving on each house. You may be able to better these prices and thereby increase your saving. L. C. C.

DRAUGHT OF FLUE.

I have a house 12x50 heated by a flue running around the house with thirty inches rise. The first twenty-five feet of the flue is brick, the rest 8-inch tile. The chimney is 8-inch tile and sixteen feet high. It draws very poorly. Can you tell me how to improve it?

T. F.

I see no reason for lack of draught in your flue. It is to be remembered, however, that 120 feet or more is a long chimney and that naturally the draught will be slow. If the same flue stood on end the draught would be much better. It may be that there are trees or buildings near by which cut off the draught on the upright portion of your chimney, if so it will be necessary to increase the height of the upright portion. The kind of fuel used will also influence the draught. It takes a larger flue and a stronger draught for wood or soft coal than for hard coal. The grate area may also be too large for the flue, in which case the draught will be bad. As the conditions and measurements are not stated more definite information cannot be given.

L. C. C.

HEATING.

Will a Weathered No. 6 boiler heat a greenhouse 20x50 and one 18x50 to 56 degrees when it is 15 degrees below zero outside? What size of flow pipes and what number of 2-inch returns will be required? There is a high, solid bed on the east side and another low one in the center with a bench on the west side; shed at the north end and door at the south.

H. W. M.

If you provide a 2-inch riser and five 2-inch returns for each of the two coils, one on the wall over the solid bench on the high side and one under the bench on the low side, you will get sufficient radiation to maintain the temperature mentioned, provided the boiler is capable of maintaining the water at 180 degrees. The dimensions of the two houses are so near alike that the same amount of piping will be satisfactory in either.

HERE IS A MONEY-MAKER

New Late Pink Chrysanthemum, Freeda Senner. This Chrysanthemum we have grown three years. It is a very profitable variety on account of it being so very late; begins blooming December 20, continuing to middle of January; color, salmon pink; large and full; strong grower, three to four feet, foliage dark green leaves, well up to bloom, and a good keeper. On account of its lateness, it is bound to be exceedingly valuable.

RADIATION REQUIRED.

We have the following houses: One house is 18x50, eleven feet to ridge, two feet glass in wall, temperature required, 55 degrees; one house 18x50, eleven feet to ridge, temperature required, 60 degrees; one house 9x75, nine feet to ridge, two feet glass in wall, temperature required 50 degrees; one house 30x75, fifteen feet to ridge, temperature required, 55 degrees; one house 22x75, twelve and one-half feet to ridge, two feet glass in wall, temperature required, 60 degrees. How many 1¼-inch pipes will it take to keep these temperatures when it is 12 degrees below zero outside? F. B.

Each of the houses 18x50 feet should be provided with eleven runs of 1¼-inch pipe. The house 9x75 feet needs six lines of 1¼-inch pipe. The house 30x75 feet will require nineteen runs of 1¼-inch pipe, and the house 22x75 feet, fifteen runs. If overhead flow pipes are used the houses 18x50 and 9x75 should each be provided with a 2-inch riser, while the houses 30x75 and 22x75 will each require a 2½-inch riser. Steam systems are frequently installed without overhead flow pipes, but where the outside temperature is liable to go very low, 10 to 20 degrees below zero, or where there is only slight difference between the level of the water line in the boilers and the returns, the overhead flow pipes are a decided advantage. SIGMUND GELLER,

FLORISTS' SUPPLIES AND RIBBONS
108 W. 28th St., NEW YORK CITY.

VARIOUS PLANTS.

Will you kindly tell me the best variety of spiræa to grow in order to obtain good results, also the best variety of maidenhair fern? I grow the Adiantum Croweanum. Is it best to grow red plumbago in pots? I grow it in solid beds. Also kindly tell when to cut it back and have it in bloom for the holidays. By answering these questions you will greatly oblige M. J. G.

The best varieties of spiræa for general forcing purposes are Astilbe Japonica floribunda and A. compacta. For extra fine specimens in pots the variety Gladstone is unsurpassed.

Adiantum cuneatum is still one of the best for general purposes. A. Croweanum is stronger in growth and can be grown with success under the same condition as A. cuneatum.

Plumbagos should be pruned hard back as soon as the blooming season is past and should then have a partial rest for at least two months. P. rosea, being a winter bloomer, can be rested after Easter and in order to have a full crop at holiday time they should be started not later than August. R.

VARIATION IN SMILAX.

I enclose a spray of smilax that is different from any we have seen and would like to know if it is a new variety or sport, also its commercial value?

C. H. H.

The specimen in question was quite dry and shriveled when received, but appears to be another instance of seedling variation in this plant. It is simply a narrow-leaved form of the ordinary smilax and either the same form or one very much like it has been seen several times before. Its commercial value is doubtful from the fact that it would probably make too light a string to suit the average florist.

W. H. Taplin.

TO-BAK-INE PRODUCTS THEY KILL BUGS

The great popularity of TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING PAPER, TO-BAK-INE LIQUID and TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER has resulted in a call for a Fourth Product described below:

TO-BAK-INE DUSTING POWDER

This is for Sprinkling or Dusting Purposes only and will not burn for fumigation. This DUSTING POWDER differs from any other on the market in being FREE FROM ANY TOBACCO OR TOBACCO ODOR and in ALWAYS CONTAINING A DEFINITE AMOUNT of FREE PURE NICOTINE, which is added to a specially prepared powder. The nicotine being in a free form, is gradually given off, killing all insects on flowers, plants and vegetables, leaving a perfectly ODORLESS POWDER OR RESIDUE, which is readily shaken or washed off, and SHOULD any remain it will NOT DECAY or ROT, thus differing from tobacco dust, etc. The advantage of this Powder should strongly appeal to Greenhouse Vegetable Growers, whose products must be free from foreign or objectionable tastes.

50-POUND BAG, $1.50; 100-POUND BAG, $3.00 Send for our Booklet, "WORDS OF WISDOM," by leading Growers, containing full directions as to exterminating all greenhouse pests.

NEW ORLEANS.

Death of Dan Newsham.

Dan Newsham was, except possibly for Harry Papworth and U. J. Virgin, the best known member of the craft in New Orleans. He was born in England in 1870 and died of appendicitis at Touro Infirmary on January 15, 1905. In the short span of his life he crowded a wide horticultural experience. Coming to America at the age of 15 years, he first located at St. Louis but had lived in New Orleans since 1891. He was in charge of the private places of Frank Bryan and Mrs. W. W. Gordon and the past season had charge of Louisiana's large horticultural exhibit at the World's Fair, whence he had just returned. He was to have gone into business with his brother, J. A. Newsham, and the Steckler Seed Co. Mr. Newsham was for years secretary of the New Orleans Horticultural Society. He was buried at the beautiful Metairie cemetery, Richard P. Steckler, C. R. Panter, Geo. Thomas, Geo. Krumm, H. Boensel and U. J. Virgin acting as pallbearers.

NAPERVILLE, ILL.—Jacob Rohr & Son report trade good, better than in January last year.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a horizontal tubular boiler eight feet long and three feet in diameter, with thirty-six 3-inch flues. I am heating three houses with hot water, two houses 10x60 and one house 16x60 and ten feet to the ridge. Will the same boiler heat another house 16x75 and nine feet to the ridge and maintain 56 degrees on the coldest nights? The houses are attached, run east and west, with shed at the west end and glass in the east end of the wide houses. V. H. T.

You will be perfectly safe in depending upon your present boiler to supply heat for an additional house 16x75. Your boiler has a capacity capable of supplying 2,400 square feet of radiation at 56 degrees. Your present houses, to maintain this temperature, require only 941 square feet of radiation and the additional house 16x75, built in a bank with other houses with only one side and one end exposed, will require 466 feet of radiation; i. e., 466 feet of 4-inch pipe to heat it. Your total radiation will then only be 1,307 feet and your boiler has a capacity of 2,400, or enough to carry the new house and as much more as you already have, provided it has good draft and first class fuel is used.

This is the second edition of this very successful book, revised and brought up to date. Handsomely printed. Fully illustrated. Carriage paid, $1.50.

Greenhouse Construction.

By L. R. TAFT.

A complete treatise on the subject. All the best and most improved structures are so fully and clearly described that one will have no difficulty in determining the kind best suited to his purpose. Fully illustrated. Carriage paid, $1.50.

TO REMOVE ASPHALTUM.

We note the trouble one of your correspondents has had from asphaltum on his heating pipes and the difficulty he has met with in getting the asphaltum off. If he will try Watson's Faultless Paint and Varnish Remover, made by the Geo. E. Watson Co., 108 Lake street, Chicago, it will remove the asphaltum from the pipes. We discovered this after having lost a crop of roses. We, too, had tried the torch, sand paper, steaming the pipes and numerous other things. We know this will do the work. Three cans will suffice for a house 18x52. P. G.

The inquiry of C. J. R. regarding the removal of asphaltum from the pipes of his greenhouses is rather a difficult question to answer. The paint often contains creosote and produces, when heated on the pipes, a gas having the properties of an acid. In my experience the most satisfactory method is the application of a strong solution of caustic soda (Na O H). A mixture of one part of caustic soda to ten of water applied by means of a spraying apparatus gave good results. The use of any acid or volatile substance like ammonia is out of the question because it not only affects the plants but it would be a very difficult task for a person to withstand the fumes which would result during the application.

After the liquid has been sprayed upon the pipes, it is allowed to remain for a day or so, and then can be washed off with water and a scrubbing brush. During the washing a large quantity of the paint will be removed. The application of the liquid can be repeated if necessary, washing with water after each application.

The caustic soda used is known as "Caustic soda 98 per cent." That purchased by me was from the Troy Laundry Machinery Co., Chicago. The cost of the substance is about 6 cents per pound and it is put up in ten pound cans. The substance in the cans is in a fine condition and readily dissolves in water. Care should be taken in using this substance not to get any of the solid or liquid on any part of the body. If any of the substance comes in contact with the body it should be washed off with water at once and vinegar applied to counteract the action of the substance. J. B. WEEMS.

The Chicago Carnation Company state: "Nico-Fume" does the work more effectively and with less inconvenience to ourselves than anything we have tried heretofore, and we have tried everything else.

Mr. Peter Weiland states: "Nico-Fume" is very effective; leaves no odor on the blooms; does not affect the color; and is to my knowledge the cheapest fumigating product now in use.

Mr. John H. Dunlop states: I am satisfied that, if the quality is maintained, "Nico-Fume" will be the standard fumigating material.

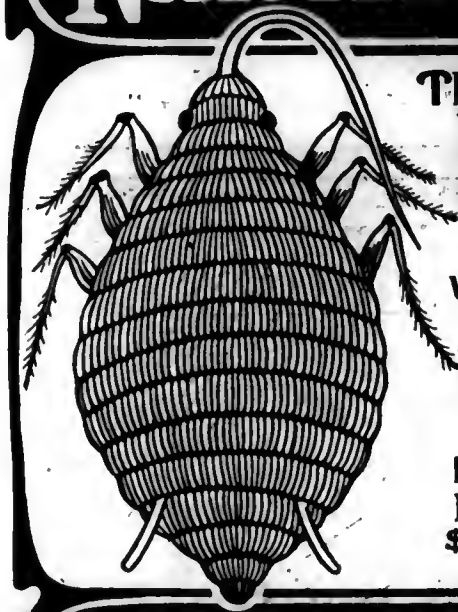
MOLD ON POTS.

The pots in my house rather quickly become covered on the sides and to some extent in the earth surface, with a green mold and when handled have a slimy feeling. Is it detrimental and if so what is the cause? M. J. S.

We read from time to time of various inventions which are destined to keep pots clean in greenhouses. So far, however, we find a cloth and a scrubbing brush the only safe agencies. Nothing detracts so much from the appearance of plants as dirty pots, nor will plants kept in such pots thrive so well as in clean ones. Keep the pots clean by all means. Use some sand if the dirt is hard to move. Moist, shaded houses, where little ventilation is used and plants are frequently syringed, are most productive of slimy plants. Keep the surfaces of the pots stirred whenever any green mold appears, using a pointed stick for the purpose and removing said material. Nothing is worse for plants than to allow the surface to get into this condition. W. N. C.



BEGONIA FOR NAME.

I will be very greatly obliged if you will advise me as to the names, botanical and common, of the begonia of which I enclose leaf and bloom.
M. J. S.

The leaf of begonia enclosed appears to be that of Begonia incarnata; while the flowers had lost all their color, we should say they were of that variety. Next to Begonia Gloire de Lorraine this is the best of our pink winter-flowering begonias. W. N. C.

THE STANDARD STEAM TRAP

A TRAP that was recently patented, one that is just what the Florist needs and wants, it is by far the simplest trap in the market, and nothing to become disarranged and cause trouble, and any person can set it and keep it in perfect order. Workmanship and material warranted ten years; a trial will convince you. CAPACITY OF BOILER.

What is the heating ability of a boiler ten feet long and three feet in diamter, with thirty-two 3-inch tubes? With 4-inch cast-iron pipe how many houses 15x50 and ten feet to the ridge can it heat to 60 degrees when it is 10 degrees below zero? Which is the better system for hot water, up-hill or down? C. S.

Your boiler has a capacity that will allow you to place about 586 square feet of radiation upon it. If the piping is well arranged and the boiler is forced a little during cold weather it should heat two houses 15x50 and ten feet high piped with 4-inch cast-iron pipe. This will allow 250 feet of 4-inch pipe to each house, which would be equivalent to five runs of pipe in each house.

In regard to the slope of the pipes, there is a diversity of opinion. Some prefer an up-hill while others a down-hill system. My personal preference has always been for the up-hill plan, as the water can be heated to a somewhat higher temperature under this plan than when the down-hill system is used.

SIZE OF PIPE.

Please let us know if 4-inch and 2-inch pipe can be used for steam heating. We now have hot water under pressure but, as we cannot get the required temperature, we would like to change it to steam, if possible, with the same pipes. Of course, we will have to get another boiler. The one we have now is a coil boiler, a regular coal eater. We intend to rebuild next spring, two houses 18x60, and change the system also.

J. J. V.

While 4-inch pipe is only used in steam heating as a main or flow pipe in large establishments, there is, so far as I know, no decided objection to its use for other purposes. If the 4-inch pipe which you have is cast-iron pipe it cannot be used for steam heating, as the joints cannot be made to stand the expansion and contraction of this form of heating as usually arranged. If the pipe is wrought iron, threaded, it will be satisfactory for use with steam.

The reason that large pipes are not more frequently used for radiating purposes in greenhouse heating is that the cost per unit of radiation in large pipe is much greater than in small. A 4-inch pipe gives 1.17 square feet of radiation for each foot of length, while 1¼-inch pipe gives .49 of one square foot for each foot of length. The 4-inch, therefore, gives only about two and one-half times as much radiation per running foot as does the 1¼-inch pipe, yet the 4-inch costs about five times as much per foot. Radiation in 4-inch pipe would, therefore, cost about twice as much as in 1¼-inch pipe. Not only that, but the labor and expense of installing the small pipe is only a fraction of what it is with the large.

If you have a quantity of 4-inch pipe it would be economy to dispose of it and buy 1¼-inch pipe if anything like its value can be obtained. The same remarks apply to the 2-inch pipe, but to a less degree. In a plant the size of the one mentioned heated with steam there should be no occasion to use 4-inch pipe; 2-inch will be ample for all mains.

L. C. C.

Please discontinue my advertisement of geraniums, as the plants are all sold; am highly pleased with results.—A. C. Buterbaugh, Waynesboro, Pa.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Fuchsia.

We often see sad failure made of that easily grown old favorite, the fuchsia, and the reason is because you have poor stock to propagate from. The fuchsia can be classed as shrubby and is a shrub or dwarf tree where it is hardy, yet in our greenhouses we treat it as a soft-wooded plant or succulent. If you don't have well ripened wood to produce your cuttings in winter time you had better not attempt propagating. That is why I introduce it as a "seasonable hint." If you have produced only small, scrubby, ill-shaped plants, throw them out and get two or three plants each of half a dozen of the most desirable varieties. Plants propagated early in December are what you want and these should now be in 3-inch pots. Keep them growing. For this purpose stopping or pinching is not desirable, as you want the largest plant and earliest ripened wood.

If grown on vigorously these early propagated plants will show no inclination to flower until May and by that time you will have plants three feet high. Plunged outdoors during summer the wood will be matured by September. Six weeks' rest in a very cool house or even beneath a bench, with only water enough to keep the wood from shriveling, and then shortened back to strong growths and started in good brisk heat will give you cuttings that will grow and make nice plants before wanting to flower. Now is the time to put away your dozen plants for next winter's propagation.

Some Good Old Sorts.

Many years ago we used to grow old Elm City, a double red. We propagated in November and the following April sold them wholesale for $1.50 each. What they retailed for we don't know. Two old varieties, Black Prince, single carmine, and Avalanche, a grand double, can be easily grown and make fine shapely plants. I rather think of late that the fuchsia specialists have produced a marvelous blossom with rather a weak plant and the singles are equally beautiful, with the doubles, only a little more so. To realize what a grand flowering plant the fuchsia really is you should visit the Isle of Wight, off the south coast of England, or California.

Spiraeas.

We have received several inquiries about starting this rather cheap and extremely hardy herbaceous plant. Early February is time enough to get them in. They can stand beneath a bench for three weeks or until the foliage starts growth. Don't forget that 100 or 200 of these plants are extremely useful at Decoration day, either as a plant to be taken to the cemetery or for cut flowers. For that purpose you can, of course, leave the roots frozen up until early April and start them in a cold frame.

Zonal Geraniums.

There never yet were too many good zonal geraniums during May and June, that is, if they were in flower. Shifting from 2-inch to 3-inch was finished about January 10 and now, if they are active at the root, is the time to take a cutting from the top of these plants, providing the growth will admit of it. These cuttings put in now make good bedding plants and the 3-inch plant will break and make a good early flowering plant in a 4-inch pot later on. Don't murder a plant for the sake of a cutting. If not strong enough to give you a decent cutting just nip only the last joint made and let it go.

It seems too simple a thing to write about, yet you occasionally see these geraniums treated to a warm, close, poorly lighted house. Pot firmly at all times, using a fresh, heavy loam, with very little manure of any kind, except the last shift into 4-inch pots in April, when we use bone meal, which is more conducive to flower than foliage. Give the fullest light and air on all occasions and never over 45 degrees at night. And one more item, let them dry before you water them. The zonal geranium is very much of a succulent and in the dark months wants little water and even in summer many a bed of geraniums is simply spoiled by the careless use of the hose, or by ignorance of the needs of the plant.

Lobelia Speciosa.

Don't forget to put in all the good cuttings you can get of Lobelia speciosa if you are in the veranda box or vase business. Seedlings are of no use for this purpose and lobelias are useless as bedding plants. If a plant in a vase gives up in August there are others to fill up, for they are always crowded, but planted in a row in a flower bed they won't be anything but a foliage plant during August and September.

Sweet Alyssum.

The double sweet alyssum should also be propagated now. It's another little plant indispensable for vases, etc. Please don't think that I mean all your crop should be rooted now, because cuttings in March are perhaps better, but you don't usually carry stock enough of these to put in thousands at once and those you propagate now will give you cuttings later on.

Begonias.

There is a splendid flowering begonia of which we are not sure if we have the correct name, but we will call it Begonia incarnata grandiflora. It is of stouter growth and much larger and brighter in flower than the old B. incarnata. The advent of the gay Lorraine has driven this and some other species and varieties out of mind. This particular variety should not be neglected, for it is a desirable florists' plant. If you have no stock of it, buy a few old strong plants that are free of disease. A rust is its enemy. You can propagate it now from the flower shoots, but it is better done later. Its flowering season is from early December to February. When out of flower almost any part of the plant will root, but when cut down about one-half its height it makes lots of cuttings, which root readily in

W. N. Rudd's Pink Carnation, Lady Margaret.

April and May. Light and plenty of ventilation and never too much watering will easily keep the rust away. Some growers even plunge it outside in August and September to produce a stout, robust growth. It always flowers at just the right season. Ten years ago we considered this one of the most important Christmas plants and shall grow it again because it will sell and is very useful for cutting.

Mignonette.

Don't neglect your mignonette bench. I hope you cut a fine crop at the holiday season. Keep the surface of the bed clean and a sprinkling of bone meal will help if it is on a shallow bench. Above all, keep it tied up if you expect another crop of fine spikes. If allowed to fall about on the bench the stems will be crooked, which will spoil their value. Besides the fine spikes you sell by the dozen you get, later in the season, a lot of smaller spikes and there is nothing our customers like so well, with a dozen carnations or a bunch of mixed flowers, as a few spikes of mignonette.

THE CARNATION SHOW.

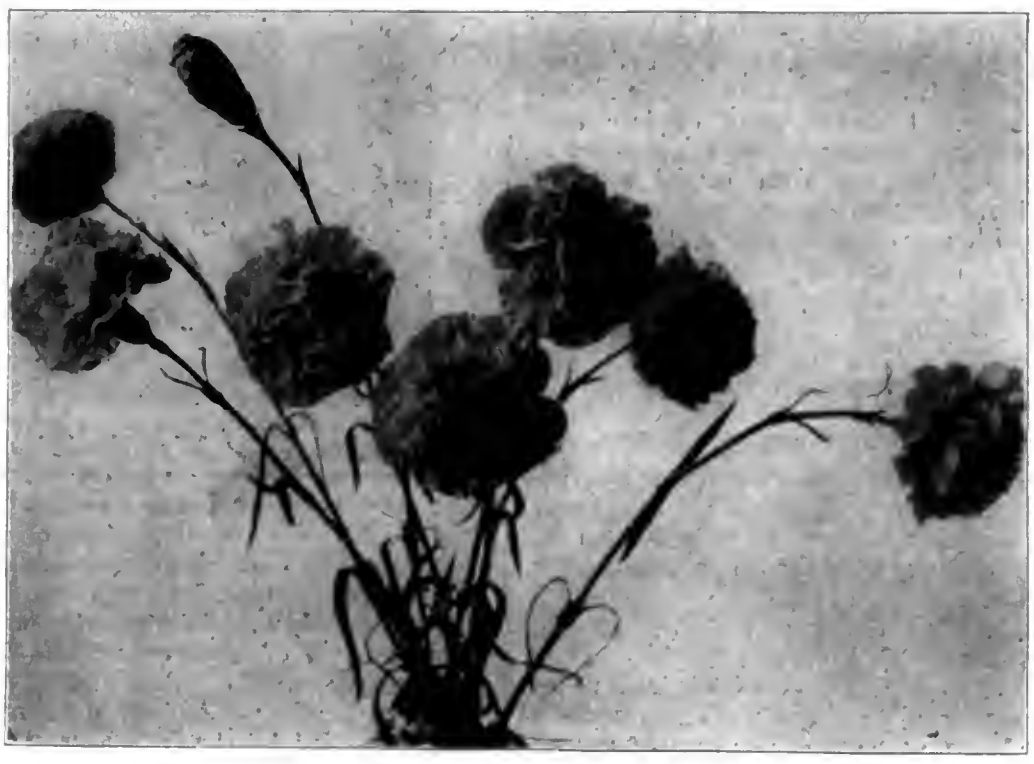
The Review gave us such a full account of the American Carnation Society's convention and exhibition that I can hardly tell anything new. It certainly was the greatest show, in quality, especially, the society has ever held, and I am sure no one who attended can possibly regret it. The stock was exceedingly well done throughout and in most cases arrived in excellent condition. No doubt one of the reasons for the general high quality was the fact that very few of the older varieties were shown, and those few only served to show the advance that has been made in the last five years. Such varieties as Fiancee, Enchantress, Lady Bountiful and a few others easily out-pointed what few older varieties there were. Old Lawson, however, had no trouble in holding her own in the dark pink classes.

Never before were there shown such a grand array of scarlets. Robert Craig, which took the Lawson silver medal, is certainly a fine thing. Fine stem, form, color and a large bloom. Victory was just as fine in every way, except the color lacked that brightness which this variety showed in the fall. It is a splendid keeper. Cardinal is a grand thing and deservedly took first on 100 scarlet. The vase Witterstaetter set up too late for competition was a grand sight. Red Lawson from W. J. Palmer made a nice show. John Haines suffered in transit but a few blooms which were uninjured showed that it is as fine as any of the others and a good color. Flamingo was there in good form but instead of standing out like it did at Brooklyn, two years ago, it had to hustle to hold its own alongside of the others. Adonis, too, looked nice but was outclassed. Richmond Gem is a small bloom but fine color.

Illinois, one of Rudd's seedlings looked good, the color is fine. We have been looking for a scarlet to grow and sell in the same class as Enchantress and surely we ought to get at least one out of this list. There is still room for improvement, however, in the color. We want a brighter red with more yellow in it. Who will produce it?

In white Lady Bountiful easily led in quantity and was conceded to be the best white in the competitive classes. This variety has not only size and form but it has the texture necessary to make a commercial variety. It is the white for the masses. White Lawson was shown in good shape and, like its parent, it has substance and size, though not as good a form as Bountiful. The Belle was shown in nice shape and of Gov. Wolcott there were a few fine vases. My Maryland, which won the bronze medal, is a fine, large bloom on a good stem and in the tall vase it made a fine show. It arrived in good condition for having come so far.

Enchantress was the whole thing in light pink and was never shown better. There was nothing shown that is likely to displace this variety for a year or two at least, unless it be Witterstaetter's J. A. Valentine, which looked very good. Dorothy Whitney was the best yellow although it does not rank in size with the other prize winners. Harlowarden took the leading prizes in crimson. Mrs. Lawson is not likely to be displaced just yet unless it be by the Aristocrat, which looks very formidable. Dorner's Eclipse, which goes in the same class is more of a commercial carnation. It may be grown in place of Lawson for market, on account of its fine stem and productiveness, but as an exhibition variety Lawson seems to be "it." Indianapolis was not shown as good as at Detroit. Rudd's Lady Margaret looks like a good commercial sort; good color and form. Witterstaetter's Afterglow looks like a good thing, after the order of Fiancee. Candace, shown by J. Hartje, is a beautiful shade of pink. Prosperity was shown in several vases, but nothing like as good as at Indianapolis three years ago.



Among the new ones that attracted my attention were Mikado from M. A. Patten. The bloom reminds one of Prosperity only it is fuller and of much better form and has deep shadings of crimson instead of light red, a very striking variety. Variegated Lawson, from F. R. Pierson Co., is about as heavily marked as Mrs. Patten. Glendale, from W. J. & M. S. Vesey, is a white and red striped flower and looks like a good commercial sort; long stem, good calyx and form. No. 155, 1902, from Dorner, is a fine large bloom on a fine stem, color neither pink nor red, but beautiful at night. No. 63, 1902, from H. Weber & Sons, is a fine large variegated white and red. No. 12 from the E. G. Hill Co. is a fine large white which won a certificate of merit. No. 38, from H. W. Buckbee, variegated pink and white, won a silver cup. No. 569, 1902, from C. W. Ward, is a fine large pink, a fine color. Alma Ward is a very good white. No. 163, 1902, from Dorner, is the most beautiful shade of light pink I ever saw, grand at night. We shall watch for this. No. 211, 1901, from C. W. Ward, is a fine crimson.

All these showed fine quality and if the growth and habit are as good they will make valuable additions to our list of varieties. Some of them will likely displace some of the varieties we are growing now.

THE BANQUET.

There were 206 present at the banquet given to the American Carnation Society at the Auditorium Hotel in Chicago January 26. The menu was in keeping with the reputation of Chicago's leading hostelry. President W. N. Rudd, of the Chicago Florists' Club, presided and at the conclusion of the repast introduced Peter Fisher, president-elect of the American Carnation Society. Earnestness marks Mr. Fisher's oratory as well as everything else he undertakes.

The Light Pink Seedling, Senator Crane.

Visitors at Joliet, Ill., on January 27, 1905.

He urged united effort in behalf of the society, which is the most active of the special trade organizations, and predicted that in Boston next year we shall have even a better meeting than the very successful one held in Chicago last week. Other speakers were President James Hartshorne, E. G. Hill, J. C. Vaughan, C. W. Ward, E. C. Miller, F. R. Pierson, Fred Dorner, Lewis Ullrich and P. J. Hauswirth. W. J. Lawrence, a member of the Canadian delegation, sang.

At the close of the evening Geo. A. Rackham, for the committee on final resolutions, read a report expressive of the society's appreciation of its hospitable entertainment. The Lawson medals were presented to the winners by President Rudd.

On the same evening the ladies, numbering twenty-one, were entertained at dinner and at the theater.

TRIP TO JOLIET.

Nearly all the convention visitors remained in Chicago for a couple of days after the convention to visit the large carnation growing establishments of the vicinity. On Friday morning, January 27, a carload went to Joliet on the Rock Island, arrangements having been made to stop the train at the greenhouses for the accommodation of the party. Four hours were given to the inspection of the establishments of the big carnation growers there. Fiancee and Robert Craig were the centers of interest, but the condition of the other stock was such as to attract the favorable comment of the visitors.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph taken in the propagating house of the Chicago Carnation Co. and shows the visitors and a bench of cuttings of Fiancee.

Many went to the establishments of Peter Reinberg, Bassett & Washburn, Wietor Bros., J. A. Budlong, Poehlmann Bros. and others and a number made the trip from Chicago to Richmond to see Mr. Hill's new rose.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—It is reported that a large range of glass for cut flowers is to be erected at Oakland, about five miles south of here.

Liquid Food.

Commercially speaking, the most practical manures to use in forming the base of liquid food are those from the cow or sheep. Additions of other manures or fertilizers are needed in particular cases to supply some certain element not present in the base in the desired quantity; therefore it is well to have at hand such fertilizers as hen manure, unleached wood ashes, soot and bone meal. Some people hold hen manure in very high value, rating it nearly on a par with Peruvian guano, but it has no such value, as will be seen when it is considered that hens live chiefly on grain, while the birds furnishing guano subsist almost wholly on fish and meat. Besides, guano contains decomposed bodies of dead birds. Hen manure is rich in nitrogen and owes its value to the fact that the excrement from the kidneys is passed with the solids. With other animals this is separated and mostly lost.

Some sort of receptacle must be provided in which to prepare the liquid and it is best to provide means for having it free from sediment when used, as it is not only more easily handled when distributed by a pump or otherwise, but it is objectionable to spread this sediment on the soil. I have used with success a number of large barrels connected at the bottom by pipes. Into each or any number of barrels, according to the strength of liquid desired, is placed a stout sack containing about a peck of ingredients. When filled with water and kept, preferably, in a fairly warm place the liquid is soon ready for use.

No precise rule can be given for making liquid food, as much depends on conditions, but it is imperative that the first application be a weak solution, the strength being gradually increased as the plants demand and can assimilate it. To start with, a mixture in the proportion of a handful of wood ashes to a peck of cow or sheep manure in fifty gallons water is strong enough. This will give a liquid about the color of medium strength tea and as the quantity of manure is increased or water decreased the color deepens, but do not rely too much on color.

Close observation will tell you when and how much to increase the strength of the liquid, also what fertilizer to add to the base, remembering that wood ashes help stem and brilliancy in flowers. Bone meal is almost a complete manure but is valuable particularly in increasing size of bloom. Hen manure, being rich in nitrogen, induces growth of foliage, while soot improves its color.

It is better to feed at intervals of a week or ten days and moderately than at long intervals and heavily.

CARNATION SENATOR CRANE.

This fine carnation was raised by E. Dolby, gardener to Zenas Crane, Dalton, Mass., by crossing Lawson and Bradt and is now in its third year. The plant is vigorous growing, producing long and strong stems early in the season. The calyx is as near perfect as possible. The flower has a fine fragrance and averages over three and one-half inches in diameter. In form the flower somewhat resembles Mme. Diaz Albertini, but is rather more double and has a fuller center. The color is deep flesh, being evenly distributed all over the flower, more nearly approaching Marquis than Enchantress in shade. The plant is a free and persistent bloomer.

At the show of the Lenox Horticultural Society last October, Senator Crane received a first-class certificate. A few blooms staged at the Boston chrysanthemum show attracted much favorable notice. In regard to its keeping qualities the writer took home one or two flowers at the close of the Boston show, after being staged five days, and they kept well for another week.

Mr. Dolby's entire stock was recently purchased by R. C. Pye, of Nyack, N. Y., who will place it on the market when he can work up a sufficiently large stock. We consider this one of the most promising seedlings we have seen of late years. The photograph hardly did the flowers justice in the group, those to the left appearing undersized.

CARNATION MRS. W. L. LEWIS.

A carnation which is making a name for itself in Boston at present is Mrs. W. L. Lewis, originated by the enterprising proprietor of the Lewis Conservatories, Marlboro, Mass. This seedling is now in its fourth year and has proved itself a money maker and bids fair to be a good commercial variety in every respect. Its parentage is Mary Wood x Flora Hill. Color is snow white and the strong clove fragrance is very pleasing. Flowers average three to three and one-half inches in diameter and are full, stiff petaled, well fringed and symmetrical, with a high center. The calyx is strong, Mr. Lewis stating that he has never seen a burst flower. Stems are stiff and eighteen to twenty-four inches in length. Habit strong and very prolific, grass of medium width. Mr. Lewis has booked numerous orders for this variety and will introduce it the present season. The photograph of the house of this variety was taken on January 2.

W. N. Craig.

WITTERSTAETTER NOVELTIES.

There was no exhibit at last week's exhibition of the American Carnation Society which attracted more attention than that of R. Witterstaetter, of Cincinnati. Because of a railroad wreck, Mr. Witterstaetter arrived too late to stage his blooms for competition. Had he been in time he would at least have rendered the work of the judges more difficult and it is quite possible that his presence might have called for a considerable change in the list of awards. We present in this issue illustrations showing four of Mr. Witterstaetter's new varieties.

Witterstaetter's Light Pink Seedling, J. A. Valentine.

That which will attract the greatest attention is the improved Lawson, to which he has given the very excellent name of Aristocrat. This is much the shade of Mrs. Lawson, with larger size, as he grows it, and a much better form. Mr. Witterstaetter says that while it is not noteworthy for its early blooming qualities, it makes good stems on the early flowers and comes into heavy crop in season to be a more profitable variety than he has found Lawson. He has made no plans for disseminating this variety, but it will doubtless find its way to the trade in the course of time.

Another pink of excellent character is Afterglow, which comes in the Scott class for color. J. A. Valentine is the name given to a light pink shade, an attractive sort but one not likely to prove a serious rival to Enchantress so long as that variety retains its vigor. No. 1021 B1, is an unnamed seedling of the Scott shade of which Mr. Witterstaetter thinks highly, although he says it is not as early a bloomer as he would wish.

BACTERIA.

I send samples of Fair Maid and Lawson carnations from near the heating pipes which about two weeks ago began to show dried tips on the leaves. They were benched in September and did well. Enchantress growing next to them is only slightly affected. Queen does not show it at all. I have been watering them quite freely of late, but there seems to be plenty of drainage. I keep the temperature about 53 degrees at night and let it run as high as 73 degrees on bright days. What is the trouble?

I. F. F.

The Lawson and Fair Maid are affected by the same thing, bacteria. We are told that these are introduced through the punctures produced by aphis, thrips, or, in fact, any insect that punctures the leaves. The bacteria enters into the leaf and starts a decaying which breaks down the cells in the leaf. These light spots are broken down cells and where it goes far enough the leaf will start drying up like the Fair Maid samples show.

R. Witterstaetter's Pink Seedling, No. 1021 B 1.

The plants being near the hot water pipes makes them a favorable breeding place for these insects and no doubt that is why they are worse affected than those farther away. Get a can of Tobak-ine liquid and spray the plants three times a week to get rid of all the insects there are and the plants will grow out of it again. The spots that are there now will remain and all you can do is to help the plants to grow out of it. Be careful not to overfeed the plants that show these spots, as it will aggravate the case. Do all you can to harden the growth without stunting the plants. Run them on the dry side and give all the air you can.

A. F. J. BAUR.

BUILDING OVER BEDS.

I expect to build a carnation house this year and had in mind planting young stock this spring in a bed on the ground just where I am going to build the house and build the house over them in the fall, letting them remain in the same soil all winter, trusting to mulching to keep them in good order. You will please tell me what you think of this plan, also what kind to plant to get the best results in a house of mixed colors and which ones to plant at the warm end. You need not name the latest introductions, just good standard sorts in the various colors. W. M. W.

Two years ago we built a house over some 10,000 carnation plants which we had planted in beds the spring before, working the same scheme you mention. It proved so satisfactory that we expect to repeat the operation next summer. That is, of course, providing your soil is well drained. If such is not the case you will do well to raise the beds somewhat and use about a foot of cinders for drainage, and then four inches of soil to plant in. Such a bed will not dry out as rapidly as a raised bench and yet drain satisfactorily in the winter. You gain much by building in this way. You save lifting the plants in the fall and you need not hurry so much with the building, just so you get closed up before cold weather.

Most any variety will do first rate under this arrangement. You do not name the varieties you are growing so I can hardly tell you how to plant. If you are a beginner I would advise you to plant the following: For white, plant Lady Bountiful, Moonlight, Her Majesty, Lorna, Boston Market; for pink, Mrs. Lawson, Floriana, Indianapolis; for light pink, Enchantress; for red, Crane, Estelle. Plant Lawson at the warmest end, the others will not matter.

A. F. J. BAUR.

FROM VIOLETS TO CARNATIONS.

I have a greenhouse 18x150 which I have been using for double violets, but have had poor success and want to try carnations. The house has board sides three feet high and runs a little east of south. Will such a house grow good carnations if properly handled? I have good soil in the benches which I used for violets. Is it necessary to change it for carnations? If not, what should I do to it? Would Enchantress be a good variety to grow? W. C. P.

While the most approved and most generally used greenhouse for growing carnations runs east and west there is no reason why you should not grow good carnations in your house, providing the glass is of good average size. A house running as yours does will not get quite as much sunshine as an east and west house and the size of the glass cuts more of a figure, too. I would advise you to change the soil by all means and use fresh soil for planting your next crop. Enchantress is a good paying variety and would likely thrive as well as any you could plant. The wants of your market should, however, guide you in selecting your varieties. You may want several colors rather than so many of one color. For instance, Enchantress, Lady Bountiful and Indianapolis would give you three colors and all good paying varieties, requiring about the same temperature. A. F. J. BAUR.

INDOOR CULTURE.

I would like to ask if any one has tried and would recommend growing Enchantress carnations in pots until spring and then planting directly into the beds, the same as you would with Lawson.

Witterstaetter's Pink Seedling, Afterglow.

Would it also be practicable to grow Red Lawson, Cardinal and Fiancee as above?

W. S. H.

You can plant Enchantress from pots like you do Lawson with good success. This variety, however, transplants easily and unless you have other reasons for wanting to plant from pots I can see no advantage over planting early from the field. Red Lawson should of course be handled the same as you do Mrs. Lawson. About Cardinal and Fiancee I can say nothing personally, but I understand they both lift well from the field. Neither one has a sprawly habit of growth, however, and I imagine both would readily lend themselves to indoor culture.

A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION DAY.

Viewed from a strictly trade standpoint, McKinley day was a keen disappointment. Reports are almost unanimous that in no section of the country did the demand for carnations for January 29 even approach the dimensions which had been anticipated. There was a good Saturday and Sunday business for carnations and that was all. In many wholesale centers the stocks had been largely augmented by the process of storing up which is practiced at holidays and the result was, in many instances, that carnations brought more money all through last week than they did on Saturday and Sunday.

It is noteworthy, however, that very cold weather prevailed practically over the whole United States on January 29, which kept people indoors and prevented their wearing flowers even did they venture on the street. From several sections the report comes that many carnation table centerpieces were asked for and the large number of buyers who make it a practice to take a few flowers home Saturday evening almost invariably asked for carnations. It is quite within the possibilities that on a year when McKinley day weather is milder, the demand will reach the proportions which were anticipated for this year.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A WINDOW SCHEME.

The material used in the window decoration, illustrated herewith, consists of American Beauty roses, Paper White narcissi, Roman hyacinths, two or three fern pans, half a dozen Boston ferns, some sheet moss, an areca, two olive green rattan screens, five yards of ribbon, the eight or nine receptacles for flowers, and two light strings of Asparagus plumosus, with a spray three feet long of Asparagus Sprengeri.

The scheme is suggestive of a garden gate, where American Beauties are clustered about the entrance. The narcissi are growing outside of the left gate, and to be seen through it within the garden. The line of Roman hyacinths forms a border to the walk which is supposed to turn to the left. The only glimpse to be had of the interior is the group of Boston ferns and the palm in the distance. The whole design is merely suggestive, not intended to be representative.

Now, as to the mechanical part: The bottom of the window is covered with sheet moss, as being the most natural background. Then the screens are set in against the glass, and at different angles, the left one being more nearly parallel with the front of the window. Three small, short vases are then set in front of the left screen, as shown. These vases are concealed under a covering of sheet moss. The effect when finished is that of clumps of narcissi growing from the ground. Just behind this screen are some more narcissi, close enough to throw a few of the flowers through the meshes of the screen. One large cluster in a green jardiniere, with a few Beauties, is seen on the right edge of the screen. Behind the screen, to the extreme left, is a tall iron plant stand holding a narrow glass vase in which is a cluster of American Beauties leaning forward over the top of the screen.

Against the right screen, in the corner of the window, is another vase of Beauties. Following to the lower left are placed some small ferneries of Asparagus plumosus, cocos and pteris, behind which is placed a vase of Paper White narcissi. This fills the space immediately in front of the screen. Then begins a line of Roman hyacinths in small dishes, hidden by wrappings of sheet moss, which follows a circular direction toward the left, behind the left screen. The space between the groups of flowers about the base of both screens is open, exposing to view the bank of Boston ferns in the back of the window. These are placed one above another on stands, and tipped forward, so that the pots are hidden.

Just behind the inside edge of the right screen is another vase containing American Beauties, falling forward against the screen, and behind it, partly visible from the front. The upper cluster of Beauties is fastened on the screen, a few turns of wire being sufficient to hold them in place. They have the appearance of being on a climbing plant.

The flowers and plants being all in place, a loose drape of broad, soft white ribbon is added, as pictured, and light sprays of asparagus previously fastened to the edges of the screens are drawn together in a loose drape between the screens. The rest of the asparagus is traced lightly over the left gate.

This style of arrangement is good for a week in a show window, with an occasional freshening, all of the flowers being in water except the upper bunch of Beauties on the right.

Besides being a window design, this scheme is adaptable to a church decoration, or a background for a wedding or reception party, a screen for musicians, or a corner in a hall opposite the front entrance. Carnations or other roses could be used in place of the Beauties. Many pleasing variations could be devised.

Carrying the Plants Over.

There is one other point, also, on which it may be well to say a few words, and that is the method used in handling stock which it is intended to grow more than one year. The general practice is to force the plants up to the end of June, then gradually dry off the beds, at the same time giving all the air possible day and night, thus allowing roots and wood to become well ripened, although in the case of teas the plants should not actually become dormant; they will start stronger if not allowed to become too hard, but are merely rested—rested describes the condition best of anything.

If ever the wood of teas begins to get yellow and the leaves fall off, it is a sure sign of the soil being too dry and no time should be lost in correcting this, as this condition of too dry soil is the principal cause of failure to ripen our rose bushes successfully. The exact point at which to give water or to withhold it altogether is very difficult to state in just so many words, but, as I have said, if the wood in ripening up has not lost its dark-green color and the leaves have not fallen off, then the plants may be considered generally to be in good condition, and an occasional syringing or light watering should be sufficient.

In from four to six weeks from the time the plants began to rest they will be ready to start into growth, but before starting they most likely will need some pruning. This I shall divide into two classes, taking Brides and Maids as an example of light pruning, and Liberty as a specimen of the class requiring close pruning.

Light Pruning.

For the first kinds it is recommended that only the tops of the plants be cut off, generally the last growth that has been made being sufficient, if it has been properly ripened. Only the very lightest wood or useless brush should be cut out completely, and, in fact, unless the plants are good and strong it would be safest for a beginner to cut nothing but the tops, and then, after the plants have made a good healthy start, he may do a little thinning out.

I must put special stress on this matter of cutting out, as it is the very point on which there may be a great variety of opinions as to what constitutes useless wood. It is certainly true that unless a person knows what he is about he will do the least damage and have the greatest chance of success by letting the plants alone, with the exception of merely cutting off the tops.

While it is the common practice to leave Brides and Maids standing upright after pruning, there are occasions when it is almost imperative to bend them down. This is especially so in the case of plants over two years old, which often become so tall that, in order to get them within a convenient working distance, they would have to be cut back too hard; consequently the only alternative is to bend them down and tie out in fan shape, taking care not to cross the canes any more than necessary.

Close Pruning.

The second class, of which Liberty has been cited as an example, requires close pruning. Kaiserin and Carnot also are familiar examples. They should be cut back somewhat similar to hybrid perpetuals. The general rule is to cut one-year-old plants to four or five good eyes, and the second and following years back on the first growth made after starting up the plants during that year. Of course, they will grow all right if not cut back to the limit, but the longest stems usually come from the closest cut plants, allowance being made for the different varieties, as a strong growing sort will not require as close pruning as a weak kind.

Most of the present-day varieties, then, can be placed under these two classes, but I have no doubt that many of the roses of the future will require treatment which will be midway between these two extremes.

Starting Into Growth.

The method of starting the plants into growth is about the same in all cases. The beds should be thoroughly cleaned off and given a good watering. Some prefer to remove a little of the old soil, but it is not at all necessary and I doubt very much if there is enough gain to pay for the trouble, except, perhaps, in special cases.

After the beds have had a good watering, whatever manures or fertilizers one is accustomed to use may be put on and thoroughly watered in. Now, this is the important part; it may take one watering and it may take three or four, but at any rate do it thoroughly. Then let the soil alone. This, also, is important, as no more water is required until the plants break into a good red, healthy growth.

Examine the soil and when little white rootlets are found, it is a sign that the plants will take more water if carefully applied, but do not give too much, as an overdose at this stage will cause the young shoots to turn yellow. This is the danger point, but once over this stage, the plants will be ready for the regular treatment which is given to any rose.

The Garden Gate in the Show Window.

From Benches to Beds.

Some growers prefer to grow their plants on benches for the first year and replant into solid beds the second year. This gives very satisfactory results and can be recommended to any who wish to run plants for two or three years but do not care to start in with solid beds.

The treatment is about the same as though carried over without changing the soil. The plants should be ripened sufficiently so that they may be lifted without danger of the wood shriveling. When ready to transfer to the new soil they should be watered enough so that they may be lifted with a good ball of soil on the roots. Now, while they may be planted directly into the new soil, the better way, and by long odds the safest, is to put them outdoors in the sun, throw in a little soil between the plants and water well. In four or five days the roots will begin to start, when they should be brought in and planted. Tramp the soil in firmly about the roots, leaving a basin around each plant, so that only the soil containing roots will be wet, and water thoroughly.

The only danger points now are dry air and wet soil. The first causes the wood to shrivel; to prevent this, keep the walks damp and the bushes sprayed for a few days, with a very fine spray. The second causes the new growth to start yellow, or even, in some cases. the plants to die outright. The remedy depends mostly on the skill and experience of the grower, but in general I may say that the first watering often proves sufficient to start the roots; at any rate, the less water they receive until the plants have begun to grow well, the less will be the chances of failure.

FEEDING THE ROSE PLANTS.

As we are now about to emerge from the dark weather and the duration and intensity of sunshine also are on the increase we can afford to apply feeding material in stronger doses and with more frequency. But if we wish to supply this food in the form of a mulch we must not forget the danger of putting it on too thickly; better to apply it thinly and more frequently than take any risks which are sure to accompany a heavy application.

The benefit to be derived from a heavy dose will be more than counterbalanced by the evil effects of excluding the light and sun from the surface of the soil, preventing proper evaporation and bringing root action to a standstill. These life-giving rays should rather be encouraged to find their way to the surface of the soil and have no obstruction placed in their way. While we may be very anxious to supply the necessary food in sufficient quantities, we must not lose sight of the fact that light and sunshine are as necessary to the roots and soil as to the stems and foliage.

A light, rich mulch will now greatly benefit those roses which are healthy and vigorous but this should be put on no thicker than half an inch and should more resemble a top-dressing than a mulch proper. A top-dressing of bone meal would now be welcomed and this also should be applied sparingly for the first application and especially if the plants are weak or the foliage slightly off color and should be entirely avoided if the plants are sickly.

This material contains ammonia and phosphorus in the proper proportions and in a very assimilable form and can be applied to the surface of the soil with proper effect without in any way disturbing it, the subsequent waterings conveying the element within reach of the feeding roots.

Where roses show a softness of wood or foliage it is advisable to give them a top dressing of lime or wood ashes. These also should at this season be applied carefully and in small doses until the season is more advanced and as no stirring of the surface is required to derive the full benefit, the operation is easily and quickly performed.

When the weather is bright and clear an application of liquid food will now be of great benefit and this, if applied at the right stage of growth, will by reason of its readily assimilable form be more immediate in its action and bring quicker results. RIBES.

SOIL FOR ROSES.

Will you kindly tell me what kind of soil is good for roses? I was advised by one grower to use black soil and another to use some clay in it. T. H.

The most suitable soil for rose culture under glass is the top spit from old pasture land where the soil is a rather heavy, friable loam, with at least fifty per cent of clay in its composition. The black soils which prevail in some quarters, while not the ideal rose soil, are capable of producing first-class roses. A slight mixture of a good friable clay, say in the proportion of one part to three would no doubt be beneficial if properly composted and thoroughly incorporated. RIBES.

TROUBLE WITH ROSES.

I send you samples of rose plants. They have been standing still and dropping leaves for some time. I do not think they have been over watered. I have been keeping the house at 56 to 58 degrees at night. A few times the house has been as low as 52 degrees, but not often. I have some Ivory in the same house that are doing nicely. I have about 600 plants in all, about half of which were carried over from last year. The latter look the worse. I notice in the sample of soil a small insect resembling thrips, but it seems to be about the roots of the plants. I have been particular about ventilation, giving them air whenever possible. What do you think of the soil for growing roses? The separate sample is the kind of soil near the greenhouse. L. R. A.

These plants are infested with eel worms and I can hold out little hope of their ever doing any good. The Perles are not so badly affected as the other specimen, and may weather through till spring growth commences, and as they are rank growers, they may outlive it.

The little insects in the soil are the larvae of thrips, which will soon develop into the perfect insect.

The sample of soil is altogether too light to suit roses, and, indeed, I would like it even heavier for carnations.

The soil in which the roses were planted is also too light. I would advise using the clay part of it without mixture of any other soil, simply adding one-fifth of decomposed cow manure. Chop the whole compost up and turn over a few times before using. It would be unsafe to propagate from such stock. RIBES.

OLD PLANTS OUTDOORS

What is the proper temperature for American Beauty? I notice that in the spring some growers advertise old plants of Beauty for sale. What are they used for? Could they be used outdoors in Missouri for cutting during summer? Could old plants of Bride and Bridesmaid be used for this purpose? B.

Beauties do well at a temperature of 58 degrees but some growers are equally successful using 60 degrees. The old stock which is advertised in May and June is used for outdoor planting and if properly handled and cared for they can be made a source of pleasure and profit and are good for years. They are much superior to young plants, as they are ready to go to work at once. Brides and Maids are also useful for this purpose but in some of the northern states they are liable to suffer severely during a hard winter. I should think they would do well with you. Kaiserin and Meteor would no doubt also do well. RIBES.

BLIND WOOD

Our Brides, Maids and Beauties are all sending up more blind wood than blooming wood; also both varieties of Cochets. The growth on the Beauties is very strong, canes five to eight feet long, and still growing, but no buds. The growth on the others is not vigorous. Temperature ranges from 55 to 60 degrees at night and higher in the day. K. H. B.

There are many causes for Brides and Maids producing a surplus of blind wood, chief among which is defective ventilation. Another very common cause is allowing the branches to trail over the bench instead of being tied up neatly. Brides and Maids will also have a tendency to run to blind wood if the temperature frequently reaches 60 degrees at night; 56 degrees is the proper temperature for these varieties.

Beauties will sometimes run to blind wood during a protracted spell of dark weather, but each and every shoot will produce a bloom if you wait. Run them a little on the dry side and keep the night temperature about 58 degrees, giving them 75 or 80 degrees when the sun shines, but always with good ventilation. RIBES.

ASTERS UNDER GLASS.

Last fall, after our mums were out of the way, we set out ten weeks' stocks and they are now coming in bloom, but a large part of them are single and no good. Can we sow aster seed now and pot them in 2½-inch pots when large enough, then plant them out in the bed where the stocks are about April 15? Will the asters flower that way; that is, will the blooms be good by having them come in so early? Ought they to bloom the middle of June? We thought of growing Queen of the Market. Our idea is to get something off of the space that the stocks took up. A. B. C.

As I understand the above, you intend to keep in the double stocks until they are out of flower and then fill the bench with asters. If asters are sown at once and transplanted into flats and finally into 2-inch or 2½-inch pots you should have fine plants by the middle of April. Queen of the Market is an excellent variety for the purpose, because it is extra early. You will get fine, pure colored flowers. They should all be cut during June, at any rate in plenty of time to renew soil and plant carnations on the benches.

Years ago, when many of us did not plant carnations until the middle of September, we often used the benches in summer for a crop of asters. With late flowering varieties the trouble was the thrips. The hot summer months are paradise to these pests. If neglected for spraying and constant fumigating the asters would be fairly eaten up. It is not likely you will be troubled on so early a crop. Plenty of ventilation, spraying and fumigation will largely insure your success. W. S.

Vegetable Forcing.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 1.—Cucumbers, 35c to $1.75 doz.; leaf lettuce, 20c to 25c case; head lettuce, $2 to $5 bbl.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—Cucumbers, $6 to $17 box; tomatoes, 30c lb.; lettuce, 40c to 60c box; radishes, 30c box; mint, $1.25 doz.; parsley, 75c bushel; mushrooms, 50c to 60c lb.; rhubarb, 7c to 8c lb.

TROUBLE WITH LETTUCE.

I enclose a fly which has been giving us some trouble. It seems to confine its work entirely to the lettuce. They work on the edge of the leaf and cause it to turn brown around the edge. Is there any way of destroying them? The only way we have been able to get rid of them is to go around with a spatter and kill them.

I also enclose some lettuce leaves that are affected. Can you tell us what is wrong with them? We are not growing lettuce to make a business of it, just following our chrysanthemums with lettuce. We bought the plants, out-door grown, and have not done well. We had a few plants that we started ourselves inside and had them in the same house with the others. These did splendidly. Both received the same treatment and were the Grand Rapids variety. We carry a night temperature of 50 degrees, have been careful in watering and have given them all the ventilation we could. We have used nitrate of soda on them. As fast as they make new growth they become covered with this rust or whatever it may be. We used hardwood ashes in the soil before planting. K. & M.

The fly you sent is entirely new to me but I have no doubt hydrocyanic gas would kill it though two or three applications might be necessary. With an egg producing insect, gas will not kill the eggs and an application would be necessary as the eggs hatch out, care being taken to do it before the fly reaches the adult or egg laying stage. It might pay you to spend a little time in learning something of the life history of the fly, as by learning how the young are produced, and how long it takes them to reach maturity, you would know just when and how often it would be necessary to apply the gas to effect their extermination.

The lettuce sent is affected with a fungus disease. Since the plants you started from seed have done so well I am inclined to think that those you bought were not the true Grand Rapids variety but some variety unsuitable for forcing, which would account for its falling an easy prey to disease. Your night temperature is rather high; 45 degrees is quite high enough. At this temperature you will get a firmer, better growth. Wood ashes in the soil is all right but I would rather do without the nitrate of soda. If you give your soil a liberal dressing with well decomposed barnyard manure before setting out your plants the application of liquid manures should not be necessary.

TOMATOES IN POOR SOIL.

I grow tomatoes in solid beds in a house 90x116 and have not changed crop or soil for three years, using commercial fertilizers. The soil is now infested with nematodes. Would sterilizing the soil help and could it be done without removing the soil from the greenhouse? A. L. H.

It is not at all surprising that your soil should have reached a condition in which healthy plants can no longer be grown, seeing that you have grown the same crop exclusively for three years without changing your soil. Of the nematode theory I am a little doubtful and, although sterilizing might help your soil, it would by no means put it back into a thoroughly fertile condition. Having used commercial fertilizers exclusively the soil is no doubt overcharged with certain chemical substances, while others are lacking. You do not say what fertilizers you have used but I know of no commercial fertilizer that can be classed as a complete manure. The barnyard article is the nearest approach to a complete manure that can be had. Again, the same crop grown successively is robbing the soil of the same ingredients year after year, and unless you go into a thorough chemical analysis you could not tell just what the soil contains. Even outdoors I would not think of growing tomatoes in the same soil for three successive years, despite the fact that outdoors the soil has the advantage of the purifying influence of the atmosphere.

Judicial rotation of crops is considered one of the most essential elements to success in horticulture as well as agriculture, but under glass rotation is not often possible and the only thing that can be done is to renew the soil. This I would advise once a year if it can possibly be done. The matter of soil is sometimes a serious question but the difficulty is not hard to surmount if you can secure a piece of land for soil purposes. When you remove the sod to make up the soil heap, cover the ground stripped with the soil taken from your benches or beds and sow down in grass and clover. Let it remain thus for two or three years and it will be just as good as if it had never been used for greenhouse work. If enough ground can be had so that you can strip one-third of it every year, you can keep up a continuous supply of good soil. W. S. Croydon.

GROWING LARGE ONIONS.

Where extra large onions are desired the present is a good time to begin operations. Procure seed of some of the large-growing varieties. Prizetaker and Ailsa Craig are both good ones. Sow in a rather free soil in flats and place in a temperature of 60 degrees. Water rather sparingly until the onions are well up. When the plants are large enough to handle, lift in bunches and shake the soil from the roots as carefully as possible. It is here where free soil has an advantage over stiff, heavy soil, which will not shake off so readily. Prick into flats again, allowing about an inch between the plants. As the soil should be richer than formerly used, the addition of some finely sifted, dry horse or cow manure will be advantageous, but the soil should still be free. Set in the same temperature as before for three or four weeks. By this time they will have made quite some growth. Then lower the temperature and gradually harden off preparatory to planting out.

The time of planting out will depend a good deal on the season, but as a rule this can safely be done about the middle of April. A light frost will not hurt them, but heavy frost would give them quite a check. A piece of good ground should be chosen, and this should be liberally enriched with manure. They can be set from twelve to fifteen inches between the rows, according to the amount of ground at disposal. The wider the rows are apart the more convenient for cultivating. Five inches between the plants in the rows will be about right; this space they will pretty well fill, providing good culture and liberal feeding are given. With this they can be had as large as fifteen inches in circumference.

Considering the extra care necessary, it would hardly pay to grow onions by this method for general market purposes; it is mainly as an exhibition article that they are thus grown. The forced growth naturally produces a rather soft onion, and they cannot be depended on to keep like smaller, firmer onions. When I first started to grow by this method I used the Prizetaker variety and I laid the poor keeping qualities to the variety. To satisfy myself of this, one year I tried several varieties. Among them were Yellow Globe Danvers, Southport White Globe and other good keeping varieties, but I found that they went just as bad as the Prizetaker in the same room where smaller, firm onions of the same varieties kept well, thus proving that it was the forced growth that lay at the root of the trouble. W. S. Croydon.

BEST EARLY TOMATO.

What is the best early tomato for planting outdoors for market? It should be of good size and smooth.

L. F. W.

Earliana and Freedom are both good. In either case the fruits are smaller than the general crop varieties, but these are the largest and best of the very early sorts. W. S. Croydon.

HOUSE FOR LETTUCE.

I wish to build a house 20x100 for lettuce. Would a three-quarter span house be better than an even-span house and how high should the ridge be if the side walls are four feet high? I should be glad of any other hints on building a house adapted to my purpose.

J. W. R.

I would prefer an even-span house for lettuce forcing. Ten feet high at the ridge ought to give a good pitch to the roof and will be quite high enough for your purpose. It is unnecessary to build raised benches for lettuce; it does much better on the floor of the house or in solid beds. By constructing solid beds, raising them a foot or more above the ground level it would bring your plants better up to the light but if you do not care to go to this trouble they can be grown all right on the ground floor. W. S. Croydon.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The last week was a record breaker for disagreeable weather, the market not suffering so seriously in years. Not only was the temperature at times below zero, but the blizzard was unequaled in its fury and injury to business since 1888. Some days there were neither shipments nor business and even now, after a week of effort, the blockade continues to yield loss and disaster. The drifts in Twenty-eighth street hide the wholesalers from each other and thereby encourage speculation. January has gone out like a lion.

Many shipments have arrived frozen. A dozen reasons appeared for the enormous supply of pickled carnations on Saturday. Evidently the growers had heard of McKinley day, but the demand was hardly noticeable. Prices asked in the early morning of Saturday were cut in two before the evening and still the expected demand did not materialize. The day was a disappointment. The prices of roses and carnations are also depreciated by the enormous quantities of bulbous stock, narcissi and tulips especially, now flooding the market. These were bought for decorative work in thousands.

With the coming of better weather social events will be resumed and normal conditions will again prevail. Some of the grandest balls of the year are close at hand.

Various Notes.

Annual dinners are not yet exhausted. On Friday of this week the New Jersey Floricultural Society celebrates its tenth anniversary at Elks' hall, Orange, N. J., and on Saturday evening, at the St. Denis Hotel, the New York Florists' Club has its annual banquet. Don't forget it, and if you have not secured your tickets when you read this, wire Chairman Sheridan and get there. Already sixty tickets have been sold. There should be an attendance of 100.

A week from Monday will be carnation night at the New York Florists' Club. Many of the leading carnationists will send the new varieties and attend. A fine entertainment and luncheon will be furnished the ladies and a large attendance is sure. The evening promises to be the best the club has ever enjoyed. Exhibitors can express their flowers to Secretary Young, for care and staging.

Mrs. Bourgue, of Yonkers, wife of Edward Bourgue, salesman for C. A. Dards, died suddenly of heart disease on January 20.

H. B. O'Dell is not in the service of W. Elliott & Sons and R. McNeff is now their traveling representative.

Jos. Leikens has completed his conservatory and is rapidly building up a metropolitan business, ably assisted by Mrs. Fenrich, whose attention to details and artistic work is proving of valuable service.

Forsythia, heather, primroses and Croweanum fern made a beautiful combination in Small's windows last week. All the prominent retailers are doing artistic window decorating.

Bronchial sickness and la grippe still prevail among the trade. It is hard to name any one who has been exempt from these things and some are still seriously ill.

All passenger rates on the L. I. R. R. were raised thirty to fifty per cent on February 1, an unexpected event that will be felt seriously by the army of cut flower merchants who bring their products to the market every morning.

J. H. Pepper was held up at Thirtieth street and Lexington avenue last week

Monday night and not only robbed of $30, keys and valuable papers, but battered and bruised.

Moltz, of Twenty-sixth street, moved February 1 to the Coogan building, occupying two rooms on the first floor.

New York visitors to the carnation convention are gradually returning to their homes and all unite in the opinion that the Chicago convention was the best ever enjoyed.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Weather conditions have been of a decidedly wintry nature the past week. The blizzard of January 24 and 25 was the worst we have experienced for a number of years. Its effect on steam and electric railroads was such as to make it difficult for growers coming to the market for a couple of days. Those who arrived found little demand. The passing of the storm found much improved conditions, the market cleaning out capitally.

Roses maintain previous quotations. Nearly all the growers report their plants as being off crop and receipts are considerably reduced. Best quality Brides and Maids continue to sell as high as $20 per hundred, good grades bringing $8 to $12. Carnations are in good supply but have sold well. Violets have been in rather shorter supply. Prices were from 50 to 75 cents per hundred. Callas and Easter lilies average $12.50 per hundred. Tulips sell from $2 to $4, according to quality. Yellow Trumpet narcissus is now of good quality. Some very fine Golden Spur are coming in. There has been a very fine demand for white bulbous stock. Some very nice antirrhinums and sweet peas are coming from several growers and freesia is of fine quality. There has been a good demand for Asparagus Sprengeri and adiantum.

Various Notes.

On February 11 the mid-winter exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will be held. Quite a number of prizes are also offered by the Park street and Music Hall flower markets. In all there are sixteen classes for carnations, also others for violets, sweet peas, mignonette and roses and in pot plants Primulas Sinensis, stellata and obconica and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine are provided for. A fine exhibition is assured and it will pay introducers of novelties to send them on to this show.

At Horticultural Hall on January 28 in place of the regular lecture a discussion on fruits took place, led by E. W. Wood, of Newton. On February 2 another fruit topic holds the boards.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will hold a field day among the market growers of vegetables in Arlington on March 11.

We are all glad to learn the American Carnation Society will meet in Boston next year. The carnationists in this section will strive to make it the best convention ever held.

Alexander McKay, for some years gardener to Mrs. A. W. Spencer, of South Framingham, has purchased ten acres of good land close to the line of the Boston and Worcester electrics and thinks he may build next spring and go in business on his own account. Mr. McKay grew some of the finest violets, hybrid roses and chrysanthemum blooms ever exhibited in Boston while with the late David Nevins and at his present stand. No such double violets were ever shown in Boston and we are sure he will be successful in a commercial way.

Galvin showed some fine Dendrobium Wardianum the past week, also a fine lot of Cattleya Trianæ and C. Percivaliana and other seasonable orchids.

M. H. Norton, who recently opened a store at Park street, reports business as very satisfactory. He has had quite a number of decorations of late.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The retail trade during the cold snap has been at a standstill, transient trade suffering most. The only business done was with the telephone. Stock at the wholesale houses has shortened up in almost everything except bulbous stock and violets, which are still very plentiful in all grades. New crop lily of the valley has been in stock for some time, with deficient foliage. Dutch hyacinths are looked for daily. Harrisii and callas are enough for the demand. Among the rest are a few freesia, Von Sions and tulips.

Carnations had the greatest call on Saturday and Sunday, owing to McKinley day. Pink was favored but white and red sold clean on those two days at advanced prices. Extra fine Lawson and Enchantress sold as high as $6 per hundred. The scarcity on all kinds of roses was very apparent the past week, all light colored stock selling clean. Not near enough Brides came in for the demand, so Ivory, Golden Gate and Carnot sold better than they have been.

Violets are by no means selling clean. Plenty of extra good California and doubles are in the market. Californias are down to 50 cents a hundred for choice. Smilax, asparagus and galax leaves sold well last week. Of this stock the market has had a big supply all season.

Various Notes.

Simplicity prevailed at the mid-winter school commencement. The school board openly stated that no flowers should be sent to any of the graduates. This order hurt the trade considerably, although some flowers were sent in spite of this sweeping order, which the fair graduates claim is not much to their liking.

Robert Beyer sustained a terrible loss the past week. His youngest son, Robert, Jr., three years old, set fire to his clothing while playing in one of the greenhouses. Robert himself was badly burned in trying to put out the flames. The little one died early the next morning after great suffering. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon. The family has our deepest sympathy.

Joe Hauser, of Webster Groves, lost his entire plant by fire last week. The place was formerly run by Wm. Clamp. There was no insurance and Mr. Hauser not being in good circumstances, a collection is being made among the trade to give him a new start.

Arnold Ringier, representing W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, has spent a week among the trade.

Fred Weber and Theo. Miller were the first of the St. Louis delegation to return from the American Carnation Society meeting at Chicago. They report a great show and a good time, also that the rest of the delegation would make the rounds of the carnation belt in Indiana before returning home.

The Florists' Club meeting next Thursday afternoon will be the most important meeting of the year. A grand display of new carnations is promised. These the committee in charge have placed in four classes for the home growers and four for the outside growers, giving each $25 in prizes. Most of the local growers who are club members report that they will make exhibits. For the meeting the following question has been sent to the committee: "What should be the requirements of a new carnation to entitle it to a certificate of merit from our club?" This question has been assigned to J. F. Ammann. The question "Which was the best pink, white or red carnation for commercial purposes at the Chicago show?" John Steidel will answer. "Which of the new varieties exhibited at the Chicago show is best for our local growers to buy?" A. Jablonsky will answer. "The exhibition from a retailer's standpoint and for the benefit of the growers" will be discussed by Fred C. Weber.

Edward Troy, who was chief clerk in the departments under F. W. Taylor at the World's Fair, will remove to Washington, where he has secured a position in the bureau of plant industry. The St. Louis florists who have learned to know Mr. Troy will be glad to meet him next summer during the S. A. F. convention in Washington. J. J. B.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The second McKinley day has passed and, notwithstanding the fact that it was on Sunday, great quantities of carnations were sold and at very good prices. Owing to the cold, dark weather recently, many of the growers held back on their cuts and so there was plenty

FANCY WHITE LILAC, $1.50 per doz.

On account of the extra demand we had to refuse quite a large number of orders for White Lilac last week. The crop which is now ready we think is large enough to supply all orders and the quality is the best of the season.

FANCY LILY OF THE VALLEY--Long stems, large bells, strictly fancy stock, $4.00 per 100.

LA REINE TULIPS--Long stems, plenty of color, the best the market affords, $4.00 per 100; short tulips, $3.00 per 100.

HUDSON RIVER VIOLETS--We never had anyone deny the fact that OUR violets are the largest, sweetest and best in Chicago.

CARNATIONS--A fine assortment of extra well grown stock and many fancy varieties.

ROSES--Extra fine, especially in Brides and Maids. A full line of Cut Flowers. If you do not receive our price list we should like to send it to you.

of stock to fill all orders. There were not nearly so many blooms seen in buttonholes as last year, but many a house had a little decoration of carnations.

The supply of stock at present is very light but all the houses seem to be able to fill orders without trouble. White and pink roses are the shortest and Beauties are in the best supply. The price all along the line has been raised. Good Brides and Maids now bring $10 to $12 per hundred, best Beauties $5 per dozen. Carnations are coming heavier than roses but are cleaned up nicely. Violets are about equal to the demand. Bulbous stock and greens sell well.

Various Notes.

All the boys are back from the carnation meeting and many are the praises heard about the treatment received at the hands of the Chicago Florists' Club. E. G. Gillett said that the show of blooms was very fine and he felt well repaid for his trip. Of course R. Witterstaetter was disappointed in not being able to compete, but judging from the reports, his exhibit was the center of attraction. Ed. Foster, Will Sunderbruch and J. A. Peterson were equally well pleased.

Our annual rose show, to be held February 11, is moving along nicely and a good display is looked forward to. All growers who have anything new or of extra quality are cordially invited to exhibit. Besides the regular classes the S. A. F. silver and bronze medals are up for competition. They are well worth the winning.

Park Superintendent B. P. Critchell's salary has been raised to $2,500. The board of public service of this city surely is to be congratulated on this move, as Mr. Critchell is the best all-round man that we have ever had at the head of our park system. When you take into consideration the small amount of money with which he had to do his work, the results are little short of marvelous.

I regret to report the death of Mrs. Frank, wife of Adam Frank, of Westwood. Mr. Frank is one of the oldest florists in this part of the country and is well known by all the craft.

Chas. D. McCrae has gone to Lexington, Ky., to take charge of Hardesty & Ootes' retail store. Since his arrival there he reports trade as first-class, and good prospects for the future.

Visitors have been many during the past week. Florists on their way to and from the convention stopped off here. Mr. Chas. W. Crouch, of Knoxville, Tenn., spent several days visiting the various growers. Others were J. T. Herdegen, Aurora, Ind.; O. C. Oberlin, Georgetown, Ky.; R. G. Boehringer, Bay City, Mich.; Chas. Frueh & Son, Saginaw, Mich.; Fred Breitmeyer, Detroit, Mich.; E. W. Guy and J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill., and E. Dailledouze and wife, of Flatbush, L. I.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

McKinley day did not bring the anticipated increase in the demand for carnations. Growers held back to work up a supply for Saturday, with the result that prices were better all through last week than they were on Saturday, when large lots could be bought on very reasonable terms. In spite of this, however, a good business was done and it is quite within the bounds of possibility that McKinley day may yet cut some figure in years when the temperature is somewhere near the freezing point. This year it was nearer zero. This week supplies are again normal and the market steady.

The situation in other departments remains practically unchanged. There is still a shortage of tea roses, with enough Beauty to meet all requirements, although the receipts are gradually diminishing. Liberty is not plentiful, but appears to be in little demand. There are plenty of violets and all other items of seasonable cut flowers. The receipts of sweet peas are not large and are cleaned up promptly each morning. Other stock is more or less slow sale except that tulips are doing a little better, as there are now several colors and the stems are gaining length. Green goods are in fairly steady demand and moving at profitable prices.

The January Business.

From a wholesaler's point of view January, 1905, was not up to January, 1904, in spite of the fact that the Iroquois disaster a year ago made the month a dull one socially. Beauties sold at half last year's price; never were they so low in January. Tea roses have been in very short supply all the month. Carnations were a glut until more than half the month was gone. The first fortnight was, moreover, exceptionally quiet. All these causes operated to work a decrease in the aggregate of sales.

In view of this it would seem that the gardeners' union, which has been heard from again, had chosen an inauspicious moment to negotiate for another increase in wages.

Various Notes.

The board of directors of the American Carnation Society asked Phil Hauswirth to make the carnation piece which the members had ordered sent to Canton to be placed on the tomb of President McKinley January 29. Mr. Hauswirth used Lawsons in a four-foot wreath, which was shipped Saturday night and reached Canton safely. It was a credit to the society. The Commercial Club held its annual banquet at the Auditorium last Saturday night and Lawson carnations were used for the decorations, which were in charge of Mr. Hauswirth. The carnation convention arrangements were largely left in Mr. Hauswirth's charge and he applied to them his indefatigable energy, with the result that everything was conducted to the complete satisfaction of those who contributed to the entertainment fund.

A skillful pickpocket relieved W. N. Rudd of his watch at the Auditorium last Thursday evening, but the house detective recovered it promptly. A large number shared in the reward.

The growers were in hopes that this winter would let them off with a lighter coal bill than the average to make up for the heavy drain of last season, but 1905 shows a deficiency of 164 degrees over the normal temperature for January.

Stollery Bros. say that they have about 200 Crimson Ramblers in course of preparation for Easter and spring sales and that when these are gone they are through with it. They do not find it a profitable forcing plant and for planting out it is unsatisfactory on the north shore unless given special attention. To succeed it must be planted in a big hole with a foot of cow manure and then heavy clay soil. And it must not be against a wall, as so many want it.

When the George Wittbold Co. rebuilt the Buckingham place store last summer, provision was made for a cold storage room underneath where there are now thousands of potted bulbs to be brought on for spring sales, also a quantity of rhododendrons, etc. The room can be kept at any desired temperature.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. reports that Liberty is this year the most profitable rose on the place. They are two-year-old plants and the first year did not pay for their board; in fact, half a house was thrown out. In view of this season's results they wish they had kept them all.

C. L. Washburn says that he took home a few blooms of M. A. Patten's new carnation, Mikado, after last week's show, and has them yet. It is a variegated, with much more color than Prosperity.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is busy this week taking inventory in the supply department.

Kennicott Bros. Co. says the sale for galax is very heavy, wreaths of this material being very popular for funeral work.

Lubliner & Trinz have opened a branch store at 176 State street.

A. L. Randall Co. reports a very large call for white lilac.

J. E. Jensen on January 31 resigned his position as foreman for the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. at Joliet and his fellow employees made his departure the occasion for presenting him with a Masonic emblem. Mr. Jensen will make a trip to the west before he closes a new deal. He will be succeeded at Mr. Thompson's by another of Peter Fisher's graduates.

The club will meet February 9. Business of importance is scheduled.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business has resumed its normal condition, interrupted by last week's fierce storm. On one day, Thursday, the express companies declined all shipments of flowers, while for two days and a half there were no trains over the Baltimore Central railroad. The wholesalers distributed the Long cards advertising McKinley day, but it did not seem to create much popular enthusiasm, owing possibly to the unfavorable weather. Shipments of carnations were so light that they would not have sufficed for much more than the common business.

The opening event of this week was Founders' day at the Union League, celebrated on Monday. There were many distinguished guests, among them the President of the United States. The club house was elaborately decorated with American Beauties, Liberties, tulips, daffodils and other spring flowers, with wild smilax and plants by the Wm. Graham Co.

The increase in the quantity and variety of spring flowers is a feature of the market. Single tulips are to be had in all the leading colors. First double daffodils have made their appearance, while freesia and white lilacs are at their best. Cattleyas have sold well but are getting scarcer. Other orchids are about over for the present. Gardenias are much more plentiful and have fallen in price. Carnations and all kinds of greens have been selling well. Beauties took a jump last week but, while in demand, they have fallen this week. Brides and Maids are scarce; many more of the best could be used. Valley is selling better. Violets are only in fair demand. Callas sell well.

A Fine Decoration.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons arranged a very handsome decoration in the ball room of the Bellevue-Stratford on Tuesday evening for Ex-Senator Emory's dinner to his old associates at which 106 gentlemen were seated at a square table adorned with long-stemmed Enchantress carnations in tall vases. The boutonnieres were of the same flower. The hollow space in the center of the great square formed by the table was completely filled by a beautiful garden scene arranged in pink, white and green. There were choice specimen plants of azaleas in garden vases, with beds of tulips here and there relieved by the restful green of wild smilax lying grass-like on the floor.

A New Company.

On the fourteenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and four, certain citizens of the town of Atco, in the state of New Jersey, incorporated as the L. K. Peacock Co. Their object was to form a strong concern that would enable L. K. Peacock, the famous dahlia specialist, to further enlarge his big industry. In a word, as he expressed it, to "do things as he would like to do them." The incorporators include the head men on the place.

The immediate results are a great increase in land for dahlia culture and a wonderful new packing shed. The noise of these things having reached the REVIEW, that most progressive paper, Phil was promptly dispatched, despite cold and snow, to Atco to see what was doing. Mr. Peacock's carriage was in waiting, driven by a former fellow townsman and Mr. Peacock himself was at the greenhouses with a hearty welcome.

The increase of land owned and leased is very large. The home farm at Atco now consists of 160 acres and the new farm, one mile out of town on the Pennsylvania railroad, consists of 208 acres. Little more than one-third of these large tracts will be planted next season. Some of the ground will be used for other purposes, and some may be or may not be used until the next year. It is found that an occasional rest is beneficial to the soil, dahlias proving as exhausting as other crops when continued year after year without change. It is also found that wire worms and other pests are apt to infest soil that has remained idle, causing great damage to the dahlia. To prevent this a season of working and then a good freezing is very beneficial.

The second important change since last September is the addition of a very fine storage cellar and packing shed 102 feet long and thirty feet wide. This structure, which, though in use, is not quite finished, is admirably adapted to its purpose. The cellar, which is about eight feet deep, is filled with slat bins mostly six feet square that reach nearly to the joists above. Each bin contains one variety of dahlia roots in nice plump condition, air being admitted through the slat sides of the bins and frost being kept out by a single steam pipe that runs around the stone walls forming the sides. The bins are filled by means of large trap-doors in the shed above. The wagons drive from the dahlia fields in the fall to the shed. The baskets filled with dahlia roots correctly labeled are handed in through the windows or door of the shed, passed through the trap-door and the contents deposited in the proper bin in the cellar below. The shed is fitted up with long packing tables and is also heated by steam. Above is a storage room, in which it is proposed to store more dahlias.

The shed and cellar have been built and piped by the employees of the place. It will be seen at a glance from the above description that a great saving in labor will be effected, as well as an improvement in the condition of the roots when shipped. Some orders were ready, carefully packed. It is proposed another season that all orders received before the roots are dug in the field will be packed in baskets in the shed directly the stock is received from the wagons and then stored away until needed in the spring. Mr. Peacock said that half a million roots went out last spring, in addition to 400,000 growing plants, chiefly in 2-inch pots.

The houses are filled with dahlia roots started about January 1 in four or five inches of soil, very close together. Some were not yet started. Some had eyes just swelling, while some, among them Mrs. Roosevelt, had shoots ready for propagating. The propagating houses are kept about 62 degrees both in the sand and in the air and shaded with muslin on bright days. The first crop of cuttings are softer and more difficult to root than the later cuttings.

The new arrangement will give Mr. Peacock the opportunity to devote himself to hybridizing and growing dahlias, of which he has made so marked a success.

Various Notes.

The fakirs were ordered off the streets by the city authorities last week. It probably saved them from severe colds, but like the buds they are expected back in the spring.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THE larger sizes of calla bulbs become more scare each year.

SEVERAL seed houses made exhibits at the poultry and fancy stock show in Chicago last week.

GEO. H. WESTON took charge of the seed department at Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, February 1.

ONION sets are now moving briskly. The prices are $2 to $2.25 for red and yellow and $3 to $3.50 for white.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Wm. A. Prosser, rep. Ralph M. Ward & Co., New York; Mr. Church, of the Walker Seed Co., Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ALFRED E. WHEELER has bought the interest of C. H. Renn, in the seed business of W. E. Marshall & Co., New York, and becomes an active member of the firm.

THE way market garden trade opens up, and the quantity of onion seed orders from the locations where the specialists operate indicate that the coming year is to be a good one for the seedsman.

MOST of the catalogues are now off the presses and mailed. The strain on the nerves of those who felt their books were behind hand can now be shifted to the getting hold of shortages to fill the incoming orders.

UP to this date Southport White Globe is the only variety of onion seed that is reported scarce. Market gardeners' strains of the Southport Red Globe and Southport Yellow Globe are likely to be quite short later on, as the supply will not hold out long against the present demand.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Clyde H. Walker has sold his interest in the Oklahoma Seed Co. to his partner, Mr. Church, who now becomes sole proprietor of the concern. Mr. Church may dispose of his holdings in a cotton business in which he is largely interested and assume direct management of the seed business, or he may secure a manager for the seed business and continue in the cotton business. A definite decision on this point is not yet made.

LONDON WHOLESALE SEEDSMEN.

It is only those who have had somewhat intimate dealings with the wholesale seed houses in London, which exist in the present day, who become aware of the enormous industry they represent. Enormous in London alone; but with ramifications extending all over Great Britain and Ireland, and in many parts of the known world. A very large amount of capital is embarked in the business. There are fluctuations in the volume of trade done; big ventures have to be made, and large risks taken. All that experience, wide knowledge, skill, resource and keen business capacity can supply is brought to bear upon the maintenance and extension of an undertaking of vast importance to the community at large, says Richard Dean in a recent issue of the Horticultural Trade Journal.

There are in London ten wholesale seed houses; some of long standing, some comparatively modern in origin. Alphabetically they are:

G. A. Bunting & Co., 3 Bucknall street, W. C.

Carter, Dunnett & Beale, 237 High Holborn, W. C.

Cooper, Taber & Co., Ltd., 90 Southwark street, S. E.

Howcroft & Watkins, 9 Floral street, Covent Garden, W. C.

Hurst & Son, 152 Houndsditch road.

Alfred Legerton, 5 Aldgate, E. C.

Nutting & Sons, 106 Southwark street, S. E.

Stuart & Co., 25 Henrietta street, Covent Garden, W. C.

Watkins & Simpson, 12 Tavistock street, Covent Garden, W. C.

In subsequent issues we shall endeavor to give some brief facts about each.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

IRRIGATION in the west will mean as much for nursery interests as it will for agriculture.

CRIMSON RAMBLER roses, field grown, are generally one of the scarce items, but one Rochester firm is offering a surplus.

TRANSPLANTING LARGE TREES.

Many nurseries now do a large business each winter in the planting of large trees for those whose pocketbooks are so deep that it is unnecessary for them to await the slow process of growth. The elm is probably more often than any other moved in the larger sizes and so expert have many tree movers become that trees sixteen to eighteen inches in diameter are transplanted with rare failures. Of course nursery-grown trees are most easily moved but when the right article is not available the nurseryman does not hesitate to go into the woods for a specimen which shall be worth anywhere from $100 to $250 to him when replanted.

It is, of course, necessary for the soil to be thoroughly frozen to a depth of not less than fifteen inches. The first process is that of digging. A circle of about eight feet in diameter is laid out around the tree. On the outside of this circle a trench, large enough for a man to work in comfortably, is dug to about two feet below the frost line. This is allowed to stand and freeze from the outside in toward the trunk. When this is frozen, the trench is continued deeper and gradually slanted towards the center of the tree, thereby leaving a ball of earth of the above diameter and about three feet deep.

After this has been accomplished, the tree is tipped over by the use of tackle and dirt is filled in under the frozen ball. The tree is then tipped back so that the ball rests on this earth, which has just been thrown in, and dirt is then thrown in on the other side. This operation is repeated until the ball of earth rests on a level with the ground.

At this point the wagon is run up to the side of the ball and the tree, by the use of tackle, is rolled over onto the truck, great care, of course, being exercised in having the top considerably above the ground so that the branches will not strike when rolling the ball of earth. In all this operation great care must be taken in the use of the tackle and the position in which the roots are placed on the truck and the strength that is exerted by the team on this tackle, as in some critical positions a slip would be liable to make the ball roll back, thereby breaking the whole top.

After a tree of this kind has been successfully loaded on the wagon it is a very simple matter to transport it almost any distance. In planting this tree the hole should be considerably larger than the ball of earth in order to allow root expansion in mellow soil after the tree gets started to grow. The operation of planting a tree of this size consists of letting the ball of earth gradually into the hole by the use of tackle. Care must be taken that the tree does not fall, as it is very hard to raise a prostrate tree from that position.

The accompanying half-tones illustrative of the process of tree moving are from protographs taken of work done by the Peterson Nursery, who have done so much of this work around Chicago that a writer recentlv remarked that it would doubtless not be long before the tree mover will be sent for as a matter of course, just as the piano mover, when the family makes its annual pilgrimage.

The Arrival of the Tree at Its New Location.

EDWARD FRIEDLY, of South Dodge, Ia., is closing out his nursery.

THE Montana State Horticultural Society held its annual meeting at Helena January 19 to 21. C. F. Dallman, of Missoula, was elected president and W. Spurgeon, secretary.

JOHN CHARLTON & SONS, Rochester, are re-introducing the York and Lancaster rose, which has been practically lost to commerce for many years. It is one of the hardiest varieties.

THE Missoula Nursery Co., Missoula, Mont., is introducing a new hardy red apple originating with C. E. Hollingsworth, of that place, and named for their town.

PROF. R. A. EMERSON, of the University of Nebraska, says that in experiments made last season two sprayings with Bordeaux mixture, one just before the blossoms opened and one just after the petals fell, held apple scab practically in check.

THERE are thus far ten entries for the prize of $1,000 offered by the Minnesota State Horticultural Society for a seedling apple which shall combine the good qualities of the Wealthy with the hardiness of Duchess and the keeping ability of Malinda. Competition is open to the whole world.

United States, but on January 24 to 26 more than ever before were the nursery interests of the east centered there. On those days there were three associations in session, the Western New York Horticultural Society, the National Association of Retail Nurserymen and the Eastern Nurserymen's Association. The two latter are strictly trade organizations, the sessions of which are open to none save members. The Western New York Horticultural Society is the leading organization of its kind in the country. Wm. C. Barry, of Ellwanger & Barry, has been its president for many years and the nurserymen of western New York are conspicuous in the management of this most successful society. On the evening of January 25 there was a dinner given by the retail association, at which the following firms from outside of Rochester were represented: Nelson Bogue, Batavia; R. G. Chase Company, Geneva; Clark Nursery Company, Waterloo; George Brothers, East Penfield; Hill Brothers, Irondequoit; F. M. Hartman, Dansville; Jackson & Perkins Company, Newark; George Josselyn, Fredonia; Maloney & Son, Dansville; Morey & Son, Dansville; J. Frank Morris, Brighton; Peirson Brothers, Waterloo; W. & T. Smith Company, Geneva; Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, Ohio. J. H. Dayton, representing the last named company, was the only person present from other than New York state.

The Eastern Nurserymen's Association elected the following officers: President, W. C. Barry; vice-president, C. H. Hawks; secretary, William Pitkin; executive committee, Irving Rouse, George A. Sweet, O. G. Chase, Charles J. Brown, C. A. Stuart. The president was authorized to appoint a committee to act with the transportation committee of the American Association of Nurserymen in the matter of freight rates with a view to securing a less prohibitive classification of nursery stock.

OSAGE, IA.—Walter S. Hall reports that the peddler who has been selling spurious Philippine lilies even went so far in his locality as to tell people that their florist sent him there because he had something especially good.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—J. W. Vestal has been elected treasurer of the Arkansas State Horticultural Society.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—G. W. Doswell & Son have moved their flower store to 131 West Berry street. They have also installed a gasoline pumping outfit for the rock well and for liquid manure at the greenhouses.

BROCKTON, MASS.—On January 24 the weight of snow crushed the roof of Louis Derocher's greenhouses, resulting in the loss of his stock and also next year's cuttings. He put it at $1,000. Mr. Derocher had been laid up by illness from July to December and the loss is important.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

While the great eastern cities seem to be paralyzed with a few inches of snow, a forty-mile breeze and a hard frost, we think eighteen inches of snow, a seventy-mile zephyr and 10 degrees below zero merely seasonable and it does not disarrange any program whatever. Nothing to complain of in the above line and business, by some cause or other, is slowly improving. Roses keep quite scarce. Carnations are on the increase. Violets have shortened up in quantity and a better price is the consequence. Tulips and daffodils of good quality are now plentiful and with plenty of Lilium Harrisii and lily of the valley we are all able to take care of the orders that drift our way.

Various Notes.

I am afraid that our city supplied but few delegates to the Chicago convention. Those who could go and did not scarcely realize what they missed. To travel around sight-seeing more than you can afford, either in pocket or time, is certainly not to be commended, yet how often does a visit to some well ordered, up-to-date place, or attendance at such a meeting and exhibition as that just closed, benefit you by observation or knowledge absorbed ten fold more than these little journeys cost. The above remarks are for the especial benefit of some very dear friends near home, who possibly think that there's "not much more to learn." Oh, my! Few indeed of us have any originality. We are simply copyists and if we don't go out and notice what successful men are doing we will soon lapse into "back numbers."

There is an effort being made in some quarters to suppress the growing and sale of Primula obconica. The public press will be appealed to for assistance. This seems hardly right. It is true, as we are all aware, that a few people are poisoned by it; that is, if they touch the foliage there is an irritation of the skin about as the bare-legged urchins of the old country used to get when trespassing on the precincts of the "stinging nettle" of dear old memory. We don't think anybody is immune against the stinging nettle, but only the small minority feel any annoyance from this beautiful primula now so largely grown and sold. In beauty, freedom of bloom and continuance of attractiveness it far surpasses the Sinensis varieties. If obconica bites you, don't buy it, but let those to whom it is harmless grow this excellent house plant.

Prof. Cowell, of South Park, starts in a few days for Panama. He's not going to dig a section of the canal, but expects to bring home several unknown species of Bromeliacea which abound in that malaria-haunted region of the earth.

Dutchmen from across the water have been arriving here for the past three weeks. They have so advanced their season of arrival that soon they will land here with their bulbs and help us unpack.

S. S. Skidelsky, with his large assortment of offers was here, also Walter Mott, of Jamestown. Walter reports business steadily improving. Such an up-to-date seed store was rather too much for the city, but the city as well as the surounding country has learned it is just what they needed. W. S.

Missoula, Mont.—C. F. Dallman of the Missoula Nursery Co., reports business very good, both in the florist's and nursery line. They added two houses last season but are still short of stock. They have two carnation sports which they think will make their marks. One is a variegated sport of Lawson and the other a pink sport from Enchantress color resembling Lawson.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The weather for the past two weeks has not been very conducive to business. It has been decidedly cold and stormy. The zero mark has been reached on several occasions. Business is quiet, with the exception of funeral work, which has been evenly distributed among the trade, all receiving a goodly share.

Flowers are not at all plentiful and a general clean-up is the result. Roses are exceedingly scarce, outside shipments coming in to fill the gap. Carnations are in good crop and are of exceptional quality. Bulbous stuff is quite plentiful, enough to satisfy all needs.

It is with much regret that I must report that McKinley day proved an utter failure from a retailer's standpoint. Sunday was very cold and raw winds prevailed. Not many people ventured out, which resulted in the retailers having a large stock left over. The public press came out with the announcement that McKinley day would be observed on Monday, which materially assisted in disposing of the surplus stock. All the stores were decorated with carnations.

Various Notes.

We are pleased to hear the report of the Clevelandites returning from the convention. All say the show was simply magnificent.

At the last meeting of the club, with a large attendance, it was the unanimous wish to make the show on Monday, February 13, a banner display. Several of the local growers will make exhibits, which with the addition of some of the crack growers from Chicago and elsewhere should make the show a decided success. All growers having anything of merit should send same to Isaac Kennedy, Secretary Cleveland Florists' Club, care of the Cleveland Cut Flower Co., 52 High street, Cleveland, O. It is hoped that a large attendance will turn out to make it a grand success.

M. H. Harrison is in New York, getting new ideas of metropolitan style.

H. A. Hart has been asked to judge at the spring exhibition at Buffalo.

The Market.

Notwithstanding the extreme cold weather last week, trade was very satisfactory, the only trouble being to get the stock. Those who were depending on the east for stock had hard times for a couple of days, on account of the railroads being tied up. Some stock came in frozen. The home growers got the benefit of this, however, and the local wholesalers report the best week of the season outside of Christmas.

Various Notes.

The delegation from this section to the carnation convention arrived home on Saturday and were high in their praises of the exhibit and also the treatment they received from the Chicago boys in the way of entertainment. The trip to the places of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., the Chicago Carnation Co. and the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. helped make the trip a pleasure, not forgetting the lunch at the Elks Hall in Joliet. Taking it all in all, they report it as one of the most satisfactory conventions they have attended.

Fred Burki, J. L. Wyland and W. A. Clarke went by way of Richmond, Ind., to see E. G. Hill Co.'s new rose, Richmond, growing in its native soil and were well pleased.

S. S. Pennock and E. A. Stroud, the crack Philadelphia carnation grower, stopped here Saturday on their way home.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be carnation night and it is expected that all members of the club will be on hand for election of officers and to hear reports from the members who attended the convention on the best things they saw, and they will tell you of a number of good things beside the prize winners, and possibly some of the stories they heard at the banquet.

James J. Higgins, now with Mrs. E. A. Williams, formerly of Philadelphia, is receiving congratulations, owing to having taken unto himself a bride, Miss Dorothy D. Watson, of Columbus, O.

J. B. Murdock & Co., 545 Liberty avenue, are receiving bids on a number of new houses to be erected at Van Emmen, Pa.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had considerable dark weather and foggy mornings during the past week and as a result flowers of all kinds have not been as plentiful as heretofore. Roses especially have been scarce and the price has stiffened somewhat. Beauties have sold wholesale as high as $4 per dozen and Brides and Maids have cost the retailers $1 per dozen, with a very limited supply even at those figures. Carnations have also been only in moderate quantity and the price has increased all along the line.

Business, except funeral work, has not been brisk, but there has been a steady run on white flowers. Violets are about the only flower of which we have sufficient quantity and to spare and they are being used largely in funeral sprays and designs. Valley and L. Harrisii are about equal to the demand, but freesias are in short supply. Narcissi are becoming scarcer and daffodils more plentiful. Good smilax and maidenhair ferns show the results of too close cutting and are getting short of stem.

Various Notes.

John Reimers, of Stockton, employed as a landscape gardener by the Santa Fe railroad, was in a collision at Blum station on Tuesday of last week.

Thos. Stevenson is devoting his entire time to his stand in the Palace Hotel. Business has been exceptionally good with him since the holidays.

Serveau Bros. have filled up their plant yard with a large stock of ornamental trees and plants for the spring trade.

There is a splendid showing of various bulbs in flower at Golden Gate park. Superintendent McLaren contemplates many improvements in the arrangement of the flower beds, which he will soon have ready for the spring planting.

Geo. Rosmarin, of Alameda, handled over 100,000 narcissus blooms this season. He has one of the largest patches of the flower in this neighborhood.

M. Olaine, of Palo Alto, is in town.

VEGETABLE PLANTS.

To have vegetable plants ready for planting about the first of April it is now time the seeds should be sown. There is a good demand every spring for great quantities of garden truck and as there is very little trouble in handling them it is one of the best paying articles for such dealers as grow this class of goods. Tomatoes, cabbage, cauliflower, kale and peppers are the only varieties grown in commercial gardens. Tomatoes and peppers should be planted about the first of February under glass and given a little bottom heat, either from a hotbed or any other method. One ounce will sow three flats and should produce about 1,500 plants. Do not leave the plants longer than three weeks over the heat and at the end of the fourth week transplant them into the same sized flats, putting about 100 plants in each. They should be kept shaded, if the weather be warm, for about a week, and after that given plenty of air and removed outside about the end of the eighth week, so as to harden somewhat. Plant them in sandy soil and it is a good plan to have an inch of well-rotted manure in the bottom of the flat. This makes them vigorous and of a good, healthy color.

The best varieties to grow in this locality are Acme for very early fruiting and Stone and Perfection for later planting. The plants usually retail here at about $1.50 per hundred.

Peppers should be handled the same way as tomatoes, but will not be fit to sell until about two weeks later. There is, of course, not so much demand for them and they sell for about double the price of tomatoes.

Cabbage and cauliflower should now be sown outside for late spring planting. As we grow both these vegetables from seed sown in the open air it is difficult to have any success with them when planted earlier in the winter, unless the seed be planted in September, when the plants will have grown to be strong enough to last through the winter. For ordinary garden planting, however, the middle of January to the first of February does very well. The beds should be dug up and well manured and one ounce of seed planted for every 3,000 plants wanted. Snails, which during the winter here are the greatest nuisance the gardener has to contend with, can be handled with slug shot.

The Early Jersey Wakefield seems to be in the most demand here for an early sort and Surehead for the next in succession. The plants retail for 50 cents per hundred.

Cauliflower, while not quite as easy to grow as cabbage, is a good seller for the gardener and if the bed is heavily manured the plants grow very fast during March. The best varieties to grow are the Early Snowball for an early sort and Early Dwarf Erfurt next in line. Cauliflower sells as well as cabbage and a good many dollars can be made by the gardener who thinks in time to plant a few ounces of seed and have a few thousand vegetable plants on hand when the call for them begins, generally about the first of April. G.

LONG may the REVIEW be a welcome and interesting guest to its readers, the craft in general, and a shining light among its contemporaries.—LOUIS BAUSCHER, Freeport, Ill.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The past week has been a busy one for the florists here, an unusual number of deaths bringing a large amount of floral work. Some of the finest stock seen since the holidays is being shown and brings good prices. Roses, carnations and violets were never better. Valley is looking fine, with prices a little higher than last week. There is a good healthy demand for all kinds of cut blooms. There are some fine lilacs and sweet peas coming in. Beauties are getting scarce and the quality poor. Brides and Maids are of fine quality and in demand. Liberties are very poor and very few Chatenay are seen, but are of excellent quality. Romans, Paper Whites, callas and Harrisii are abundant, while tulips are scarce. The coming week promises to be a busy one, as there are quite a number of balls and receptions to make it interesting.

Various Notes.

McKinley day was a "frost" here, very few being seen wearing the carnation. Some of the local dealers invested heavily in stock but were forced to sell at a sacrifice.

Miss M. Dalley and her sister, Julia, are confined to their home with the grippe.

Mann & Chiles, two young florists who bought out Mrs. Duss, in the Gumble building, failed last week. The stock and fixtures are for sale.

One of the most modern, up-to-date establishments in this city is that of the Alpha Floral Co., on Walnut street. Their latest addition is an improved four-drawer cash register, costing $550, one drawer for each clerk, making it an easy matter to foot up each evening the amount taken in and paid out each day. They have also added a fire and burglar-proof safe. They have purchased the property at 912 East Tenth street.

Chas. Wise reports business as very good in his line and is adding greatly to his stock.

D. Freudenthal reports business as increasing greatly in his new location.

Miss Jewell reports business as quiet at present, but indications point to a steady increase.

Ed A. Tonquist, with Miss Dalley, who has been confined to his home since Christmas from an injury received that day, is able to be out again.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Business is improving, also stock. After a period of very dark, cloudy weather we are experiencing nice, bright but cold weather.

Van Bochove Bros. are busy building their new place. A shed is being built and painters will be at work as soon as the woodwork for their new greenhouses arrives. At the old place everything looks as prosperous as ever.

Grofvert & De Smith have very fine carnations, especially Joost, Lawson and Her Majesty.

At Mountain Home cemetery, Mr. Fraser, head gardener, says everything looks well. Mr. Fraser has a very fine house of Lawson carnations.

S. Batson has his carnation houses in very fine shape and is cutting heavily. He also has a lot of wallflowers planted in benches from which he cuts blooms for the Cincinnati market.

At the Central Nursery greenhouses everything is looking well, especially the carnations. Their lilies and other pot plants are fine. Cuttings of carnations are potted and looking well.

J. A. Calder, an East Main street florist whom I visited last Sunday, has the strongest and longest-stemmed carnations I ever saw. This gentleman grows his carnations very cool, 46 degrees at night. While he does not cut heavily during the winter months, his carnations will bring a heavy crop in February and the spring months. Mr. Calder wishes to retire from active business on account of old age. His is a small place, of about 5,000 feet of glass, and will be for sale after June 1.

The Dunkley Floral Co. is in nice shape. Their carnations are fine and roses doing well. Mrs. Dunkley sent out invitations for a social last week and the boys had a very enjoyable time. H. M.

New Portage, O.—Snyder & Young are preparing to put up two houses, 20x100 in the spring.

Fremont, Neb.—C. H. Green represents the florists of the state on the board of directors of the Nebraska State Horticultural Society.

MILWAUKEE.

If every daily paper were to feature McKinley day as did the Sunday Sentinel it would not take very long to make it an occasion of prime importance to the florists' trade. The Sentinel devoted the front page of its colored supplement January 29 to a portrait of President McKinley surrounded by a bunch of well executed carnations with the inscription beneath, "Wm. McKinley, whose favorite flower is worn today by a grateful and loving people." The Sentinel is the leading paper in Milwaukee and the advertisement was of great value to the trade, although the weather was too cold to permit of the wearing of carnations upon the street.

BRIDGEWATER, CONN.

All the wholesale growers and retail dealers report a very good business during the holidays, but trade has been a little slow through January in spite of considerable funeral work.

G. C. Bouton & Son are comparatively recent additions to the craft here, as they started in business only three years ago. They began with a greenhouse for their own amusement, but the neighbors came to them for plants and at the end of the year they found that they had made money, and built another greenhouse next season, growing about 500 carnations and a quantity of bedding stock. They also did quite a business with tomato and other vegetable plants. Last year they built a small house for chrysanthemums and expect to add more glass shortly.

FINDLAY, O.—F. W. Herleman, of Marion, Ind., has been here on a visit.

FIANCEE CUTTINGS.

TO THE TRADE:—

We beg to inform all florists who have orders placed for Carnation Fiancee we have been somewhat disappointed in its refusing to produce enough cuttings for January deliveries owing to its superb habit of producing long flowering stems only.

These stems have now been pinched back from 30,000 plants and there is now an abundance of excellent cuttings coming along.

We are putting in the sand large batches every week and expect by the latter end of March that all orders now on our books will have been filled. There is an average of 20 cuttings to the plant now in sight making a total of 600,000 available cuttings for Spring deliveries.

Fiancee has no disease of any kind; it makes fine strong plants by Fall, even from May struck cuttings, in fact it is the strongest grower of any carnation.

We further wish to state that we intend everyone shall be satisfied with the quality of cuttings received; would rather be the loser ourselves than otherwise.

Those who visited our greenhouses after the Convention can vouch for the reliability of this statement in the whole and especially for quality and quantity of cuttings obtainable.

We ask everyone to be patient and in the end they will have no kick coming to anyone. CHICAGO CARNATION CO.

DREER SEASONABLE SPECIALS!

DAHLIA KRIEMHILDE

Dahlia Kriemhilde The most beautiful Dahlia among the Cactus varieties in cultivation today. Its delicate combination of colors is well reproduced in the colored plate on the cover of our this season's Retail Catalogue; its delicate shell pink petals, passing to white in the center make it the ideal flower for cutting, an early and continuous bloomer, with strong, long stems. Field-grown roots, $1.50 per dozen; $12.00 per 100.

Dahlia Twentieth Century The most popular single variety for cutting. Roots, $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

We make a specialty of Dahlias, and list 175 varieties in our current Wholesale List, the cream of all the various types, and the most up-to-date collection in the country.

The New Marguerite, or Daisy Queen Alexandra

We are now booking orders for delivery during the latter part of February for this charming new form of Chrysanthemum frutescens, or Paris Daisy; the flowers are from 2½ to 3 inches in diameter, of a pure white color, the greater percentage of these coming full double, not unlike an Anemone-flowered Chrysanthemum, though single and semi-double flowers appear on the same plant, all of which, however, are handsome. A plant that is certain to prove valuable, both as a pot plant as well as for cut flowers; 20 cents each; $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Phlox F. G. von Lassburg The Finest White Phlox to date: the individual flowers are double the size of any white variety now in cultivation, a strong grower and a free continuous bloomer; 25 cents each; $2.50 per dozen; $18.00 per 100. Phloxes are one of our specialties. If you require standard varieties we are in position to supply the leading sorts by the thousands.

DREER'S QUARTERLY WHOLESALE PRICE-LIST of SEEDS, PLANTS, BULBS, etc. is mailed to all Florists. If you do not have it at hand, please advise us and a copy will be sent at once.

RED SPORT (Of Maceo.)

This new "Bread and Butter" commercial brilliant "Crane" Red Carnation, now in its fourth year, has the hardy constitution of General Maceo, with a stronger heavier growth, longer and stiffer stem and a larger flower. Growing under the same conditions and in the same house with Flamingo and Estelle it has produced four times as many blooms as the former and twice as many blooms as the latter. The color is as good as Estelle and the bloom brings as much as does Estelle at its best. Every flower is of a uniform brilliant red, perfectly double with an ideal calyx, in fact we never saw a split one.

Red Sport is perfectly healthy, an easy variety to grow, an early and continuous bloomer, throwing its heaviest cuts around the Christmas holidays and during the Winter months when red is in demand. Red Soort wi l keep longer and travel farther than any other red carnation, and will prove a bonanza to the grower who does a shipping business. If the scarcity of reds in the market that now exists continues Red Sport will pay better to the square foot of bench than any other variety of any color to date. Every florist who has seen Red Sport growing has placed an order for rooted cuttings, which tells the tale. All our stock is sold up to January 25th. Orders filled in strict rotation from that date on. Price, 12 for $1.50, 25 for $2.50, 50 for $4.00 all post paid. $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000, by express. We guarantee all cuttings to be well rooted and to arrive in good condition.

PROPAGATING DAHLIAS.

Will it do to grow cuttings from dahlia bulbs which were produced from cuttings last spring? I took quite a lot of cuttings from some choice kinds last spring, which proved to be far better than the flowers grown from the original bulbs. What I want to know is if it will do to continue growing cuttings from bulbs produced from cuttings, or if they will run out, or in other words come without any blooms or imperfect ones? If started early I believe a person could raise at least 100 plants from a single bulb, as the cuttings will soon produce more cuttings and so on.

L. M. B.

We have never heard that any variety of dahlias deteriorates by cuttings taken from the roots, that is, year after year propagated by cuttings. Propagation again the same spring from these cuttings I am not so sure about, but if not done to excess I see no reason why there should be any weakening of the plant. Propagation by cuttings, as we do our carnations, roses and hundreds of other plants, is not producing a new individual. It is simply a division of the old and unnaturally keeping them growing and no rest.

Some plants, or even varieties of the same species, endure this treatment for many years; others don't. In the case of the dahlia it is not quite the same. In June you plant out the stock propagated from a cutting. It forms healthy roots and tubers and you give them a rest during winter, until the following March or April, before starting to produce cuttings. An expert on dahlias told me years ago that he always preferred young plants to produce his prize flowers. An authority writing on dahlias, says that a cutting should always be cut close to a joint. If cut between joints it will grow and flower but no tubers will be formed, only thin, straggling roots.

NEW ORLEANS.

The horticulturists of New Orleans met January 20 in Kolb's Hotel and discussed plans for the furtherance of the interests of the profession in this section. President Harry Papworth presided.

Among the things discussed was the coming state convention which will be held here, and a fall flower show. No flower show has been given in three years because the society lost money on the last one. Secretary Panter proposed that the show, if given, be given for the benefit of the society. A committee was appointed to handle the subject. C. W. Eichling recommended earnestly that a movement be started for the inauguration of a course in horticulture in the public schools. After his talk a resolution was adopted favoring the project.

The secretary's report showed $123 balance on hand. A committee on resolutions was appointed to draw up resolutions on the death of Dan Newsham, a prominent light of the society.

PIPING.

How many runs of 1¼-inch pipe will it take to heat with steam a house 11x30 and one 20x28. The two houses are attached. We need a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees in coldest weather.
S. J. H.

In order to successfully heat the houses under consideration to 55 degrees during severe weather the house 20x28 feet should contain a 2-inch riser under the ridge, carried to the most distant point from the boiler, and there divide into two or three manifolds or coils to return under the benches or along the side walls, the coils so placed as to have a total of eleven 1¼-inch pipes. About five of these pipes should have valves at each end, so that during warm weather they can be put out of service. The smaller house, 11x30, should be piped in like manner. Use a 2-inch riser and seven 1¼-inch pipes in the returns. In this case it would be well to put valves on three of the seven returns. L. C. C.
